

'Whiteout' Claims Three in Alaska

Bethel, Alaska—(UPI)—Three persons were killed in the crash of their light plane near here Saturday after the pilot lost his bearings in a "whiteout," a condition in which the sky and snowy ground blend together.

The plane, piloted by Gary Hodges of Bethel, had flown a Public Health Service sanitation expert, Jack E. Davis, to the village of Scammon Bay, 150 miles northwest of here.

En route back to Bethel they had stopped at the village of Chevak to pick up another health service employee, Teresa L. Chimeralrea, and were just 20 minutes out of Bethel when Hodges reported encountering the whiteout.

Bodies of the three victims were brought to the Alaska native service hospital here Sunday.

Welfare Stresses Rehabilitation

Salem—(UPI)—Rehabilitation was stressed as the State Public Welfare Commission took a look Friday at the State General Assistance program and the federal program for Aid to Dependent Children of the Unemployed.

The commission approved a five-point resolution encouraging rehabilitation. It stresses work relief programs at the city and county levels, intensified case-work to return the employables to the job rolls, and vocational rehabilitation.

The commission heard a protest over the federally ordered "fraud hunt" in the ADC program. The federal government has required a survey to look for cheaters.

Assistant administrator Geraldine Derby said the current two-month survey is taking the time of 30 staff members and costing $77,000.

Two Boys Stranded On Cliff at Delake

Delake—(UPI)—Two 18-year-old Taft High school boys were stranded for two hours on a cliff overlooking the ocean four miles north of here Sunday.

Robert Calkins of Oceanlake and Tom Miller of Delake were stranded when the tide came in but were talked down by the Devil's Lake Fire department after the tide receded slightly.
