

In spring a young man's fancy not only turns to thoughts of love but also to raising flowers and shrubs to make the home more attractive.

And when the planting is done and it's time to wait for blooms to appear, an excellent easy-to-build project is a hothouse to help with gardening next year, as well as allowing gardening activities to continue through the winter.

Such a unit can be built at low cost in a week end or a few days, ranging from a five-by-eight foot unit for the beginning to commercial size for professional horticulturists. Hothouses are particularly desirable on farms or in small towns or other rural areas where public nurseries aren't available to supply flowers and shrubs.

Although cost varies in different areas, building materials for an eight-by-eight-foot hothouse will be approximately $125, allowing $50 for lumber and plastic coating and $75 for a small heater.

Inasmuch as many homes in outlying areas use liquefied petroleum gas for home heating and kitchen appliances, an LP-gas heater can be piped into the present LP-gas system where needed.

Several models of automatic LP-gas space heaters are suitable for the hothouse, all thermostatically controlled to maintain temperatures within two degrees of the desired setting. These can be obtained from local appliance dealers who will recommend the proper size to use depending on the number of cubic feet of air space in the hothouse.

Such a unit assures protection for plants and shrubs throughout the year, even during winter storms when other power systems may fail.

Professional Women Gaining in Numbers

Washington—1979—The professional woman is making gains in numbers in government. The U.S. department of labor women's bureau reports that in the 20-year period, 1959-1979, the number of professional personnel, female, jumped from eight per cent to 15.

Women numbered 34,788 in 1959, or about five and a half times more than in the late 1830's. However, the professional woman in government still is outnumbered by the woman clerical worker—the accounts for 78 of every 100 women in white collar occupations in the U.S. government.

Living Fence In Garden Favored When of Roses

If you'd like to add a fashionable touch to your home property, plant an everblooming rose fence. Everblooming roses have two heavy blooming periods, one in spring or early summer and the other in the fall, usually with many flowers and lavish color in between these seasons.

The modern rose blooms for an extraordinarily long period every year, longer than almost any flower that can be named.

The rose fence can be particularly lovely and fashionable and it requires only a moderate amount of care. One can have red, orange, white, pink, yellow, lavender and in-between shades. Roses of different colors may be mixed, or the fence may be solid with one color.

Select Wisely
In planting your rose fence, select varieties wisely. Climbing red roses flourish and fence can afford a brilliant contrast. Other colors may also be used.

Climbing roses may be preferable where they have such support as a masonry wall or wood or wire fence. Thick growing rose plants such as Rosa Multiflora are not suitable as a rose fence for small homes.

Plant Cise
Floribunda and grandiflora roses will grow into a living fence of striking color without support. Plant them close together, about two feet apart, using approximately 50 plants for a hundred foot fence. Your nurseryman can recommend varieties to grow to any desired height.

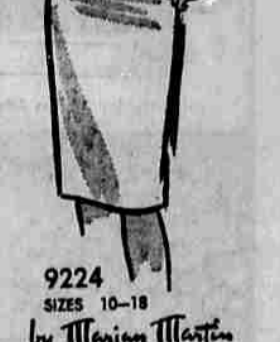

Agricultural Work Can Be Glamorous
Akron, Ohio—1979—A career in agriculture can be as attractive and exciting to youth as one in the "glamour industries" of space and electronics, J. W. Keener, president of The B. F. Goodrich company, said here recently.

Keener, chairman of the sponsoring committee for the Future Farmers of America Foundation, Inc., said success in agriculture today is based on skills that "run the gamut from biological chemistry to marketing, from agronomy to rural economics, from veterinary medicine to sociology."

CALCULATING

Wellesley, Mass.—1979—If you were trying to fly a spaceship to the moon, it would take the rest of your life, and then some, just to figure the proper trajectory. A computer here can make the necessary 36 million calculations in just one hour.
