Feeding the Family By ZOLA VINCENT Food Editor

Fresh Mushrooms—The Wonder Dish Homemakers who used to wonder what to do with fresh mushrooms now wonder how they ever got along without them. For years, it was said "like sequins on a sweater or the ruffle on a petticoat are mushrooms in a meal." They dressed up ordinary foods into something very special and a mushroom sauce was thought truly elegant.

Today, mushrooms are big business in our part of the country, with California fourth in production for all purposes and probably first in production of mushrooms for the fresh market. Seattle also is an important shipping point.

Ways With Mushrooms Mushrooms add zest and flavor to gravies, sauces, soups and casserole dishes. They are a fine food in their own right when served as a vegetable or as main dish. Their delicate flavor blends well with other foods. Steaks achieve an epicurean quality when merely garnished with gently sauteed mushrooms.

Mushrooms may be sauteed, stewed in their own juice or creamed and all with very little preparation. Be very careful not to overcook. They are good marinated and offered alone or tossed lightly in a salad.

Easy Preparation Preparation is a breeze. Simply wipe fresh mushrooms with a damp paper towel, trim stems, and proceed to use in any favored way. Never soak mushrooms as those precious minerals and vitamins are water soluble. If you feel you must wash them, do it quickly under a cold water spray, dry immediately on paper toweling.

Codfish A La Gomes De Sa Favored Portuguese Recipe Portugal with its 35,599 square miles supports a population of 9,124,000. This, incidentally, works out to be approximately 256 people per square mile. Seafoods play an important part in the diet of the Portuguese and one of their long time treasured recipes as recorded in Favorite Recipes from the United Nations is this hearty dish of codfish, potatoes and onions. Recipe makes 8 to 10 servings.

1 pound fresh fillet of codfish 1 1/2 teaspoons salt 3 large potatoes 3 medium onions 1 pint olive oil for frying 1 clove garlic 1/2 teaspoon black pepper 2 hard-cooked eggs (chopped) 1/2 cup finely chopped parsley

Place the codfish fillets in a saucpan, cover with boiling water and one teaspoon of the salt and cook for 30 minutes or until the codfish fillets are tender. Drain and flake the codfish, removing bones.

Wash the potatoes and cook them with their skins on in boiling water until tender. Peel and cut into half-inch slices. Pare onions and slice into quarter-inch slices.

Pour the olive oil into a large skillet (12-inch diameter and three-inch depth) and heat with the garlic until the clove is browned. Remove the garlic and add the onion slices, cooking slowly until the onions have browned. Add the potato slices, codfish, pepper and remaining salt. Fry for 10 minutes, stirring lightly. Remove mixture from oil and serve hot on a platter. Sprinkle with the chopped hard-cooked eggs and parsley.

"DO-IT-YOURSELF TARIFF BARGAINING KIT" When we meet with the nations of the free world in Geneva in 1964 for the crucial "Kennedy Round" of tariff bargaining, all the negotiators will have for the first time in world history of tariff bargaining, simple tables showing the rates the U.S. slaps on imports from Europe and the rates Europe slaps on imports from us.

Our chief negotiator, former Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, will be able to point to a table in a 1,000-page book showing comparative tariffs on automobiles, for instance, and say in effect, "This shows the European Common Market imposes a 21.3 per cent tariff on U.S. autos we send to your ports, while we impose only an 8.8 per cent tariff on autos you send to our ports. That's not a proper balance. Here's a place where you should cut."

In turn, the chief negotiator for the European Common Market will be able to point to another table in the book and say in effect, "This shows you penalize our sales of wool and other animal hair to you with a 23 per cent tariff while we impose only a 1.7 per cent tariff on your sales to us. That's scarcely a proper balance either. Here's a place where you should cut."

It seems incredible that through the history of international tariff negotiations there hasn't been available to the bargainers a comprehensive compilation of the tariffs imposed on the thousands of items traded in the world markets. It seems unbelievable that through the years, the enormous amount of essential information has not been so organized that the negotiators could compare rates at a glance.

It's true, though. No government ever has bothered to organize the information for its bargainers into a sort of "Do-It-Yourself Tariff Negotiating Kit."

No government has done it this time either. Rather, the 1,000-page book which the Geneva negotiators will use has been put together after two years of intensive work by a dedicated staff of the Committee for Economic Development—a non-partisan, non-profit group of leaders in U.S. industry, education, labor and agriculture. Today, the results are being released to all interested governments, importers, exporters, marketing firms, etc., in the form of a two-volume, 3-inch thick, 3 1/2-pound $50 tome with the sleep-inducing title "Comparative Tariffs and Trade, The United States and the European Common Market."

A week from next Thursday, May 16, representatives of 44 nations at the ministerial level will convene in Geneva to lay the groundwork for the first tariff-cutting negotiations since we passed our historic Trade Expansion Act of 1962. This meeting will be of vital importance in view of the squabbles between France and West German and between the Common Market and us over tariffs on farm products and General de Gaulle's veto of Britain's entry into the Common Market. If the Geneva talks go badly, the "Kennedy Round" of tariff negotiations might be delayed beyond the scheduled date of spring 1964. But neither France nor West Germany nor any individual nation can indefinitely hold back the power forces working toward freer and greater trade in the free world. This "Guidebook to the Kennedy Round" isn't to be wasted.

The book isn't "light" on any count—content, weight, price, title—but you can have some intellectual fun with many of the comparisons. For instance, on toys and games, we penalize Europe's imports with a 28.2 per cent tariff against their 22.4 per cent tariff on our toys and games. Are we being meaner to our kids than Europe is to hers?

On mattresses and bedding, the Common Market imposes an 18 per cent tariff on our imports against our 14.2 per cent. Can it be that Europe's famed lovers do not appreciate America's beds?

In a more serious vein, both of us impose tariffs on books, newspapers, manuscripts, the like. Why? Shouldn't we erase entirely the barriers to exchange of educational material and knowledge?

In a most serious vein, we're realizing now the towering difficulties leaders of the free world will face as they try to shatter the walls restricting trade among us. But the walls will go down—and helping the bargainers will be the CED's "Do-It-Yourself Tariff Kit."

In turn, the chief negotiator for the European Common Market will be able to point to another table in the book and say in effect, "This shows you penalize our sales of wool and other animal hair to you with a 23 per cent tariff while we impose only a 1.7 per cent tariff on your sales to us. That's scarcely a proper balance either. Here's a place where you should cut."

It seems incredible that through the history of international tariff negotiations there hasn't been available to the bargainers a comprehensive compilation of the tariffs imposed on the thousands of items traded in the world markets. It seems unbelievable that through the years, the enormous amount of essential information has not been so organized that the negotiators could compare rates at a glance.

It's true, though. No government ever has bothered to organize the information for its bargainers into a sort of "Do-It-Yourself Tariff Negotiating Kit."

No government has done it this time either. Rather, the 1,000-page book which the Geneva negotiators will use has been put together after two years of intensive work by a dedicated staff of the Committee for Economic Development—a non-partisan, non-profit group of leaders in U.S. industry, education, labor and agriculture. Today, the results are being released to all interested governments, importers, exporters, marketing firms, etc., in the form of a two-volume, 3-inch thick, 3 1/2-pound $50 tome with the sleep-inducing title "Comparative Tariffs and Trade, The United States and the European Common Market."

A week from next Thursday, May 16, representatives of 44 nations at the ministerial level will convene in Geneva to lay the groundwork for the first tariff-cutting negotiations since we passed our historic Trade Expansion Act of 19
