Grants Pass Student Describes Tour Through Parts of England

(Editor's note: This is another in a series of dispatches from Charles A. (Chuck) Moore, former Medford resident now in England under the Experiment in International Living and Lewis and Clark college program. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Moore, 1239 Watson dr., Grants Pass.)

By CHARLES A. MOORE
March 15: Early this morning Norm and I went out to Westerham and did some brass rubbings. I gave the Sedons the one of William Myddleton (1557) with his two wives and seven children.

After dinner I prepared the house for the party, one of the best ways that Experimenters can repay their families. All is planned and executed by the Experimenters themselves. We had just about everything under the sun for refreshments. The biggest thing was the innovation I introduced into British society. The adults went wild over the idea of sprinkling instant coffee on ice cream.

All 30 present seemed to have a wonderful time. The Traal boys that were living with Mike Rear were crazy for the twist and started it going, so Ulanda (Norm's Swiss sister) and I gave a short demonstration.

March 16: The Sedons drove me down to the International Hall of Residence to catch LC's touring coach this morning. Their company has been so enjoyable; it was difficult to leave. I shall be visiting them quite often.

The coach was a great big 41-seater and all windows. We arrived in Stratford-upon-Avon about 5 o'clock. Here we stayed the night.

March 22: Our tour ended today when we pulled into the International Hall. This is to be our place of residence for a little more than a fortnight. The tour did a wonderful job of accomplishing its twofold purpose. Ruth Heckman, our Experiment leader, wanted to get to know individuals in the group and have them really get to know each other before our serious study started. She also wanted us to see a fairly representative slice of the island. These two things are exactly what we accomplished.

Fascinating Districts
Wales, Westmorland, and the Lake district are fascinating. Most of the country is covered with green, close-cropped grass used for sheep grazing. The moors we could see from the coach are all in grazing fields surrounded by stone walls, stretching for miles and miles.

For miles irregularly shaped checker boards separated the little fields, which were claimed from the wilds so long ago. The stones were plowed up then piled in rows after row. And not just piled; these stones were carefully laid one upon the other to form beautiful walls that would last throughout the long centuries.

The soft, thick close-cropped grass is just wonderful for hikers. Throughout the whole trip we never found a spot quite so pleasing as the grounds at Bolton Abbey ruins. The Abbey itself is nestled in a small valley near the source of the river Warfe. A person can hike for hours along the river bank, along the river in the hills, or through the woods, and that is exactly what I did. Somehow the nearness of grazing sheep and the rushing of the river imparts a quiet serenity that even the Rogue River can't duplicate.

Skipton Castle, was my field day, for at last the words of Trevelyan came to life. This castle was deeply involved in the Civil War. Being the only Royalist stronghold in the north after the Battle of Marston Moor, it was besieged for three years (1642-1645) but could not be taken. Skipton was the only castle that managed to hold out against Cromwell's Roundheads. The walls never breached. Sir John Mallory finally secured most honorable surrender terms on Dec. 21, 1645. York Interesting Place a city has a personality of its own. The wall around Canterbury is of a stately grey stone, very dignified. The Chester wall is more adamant, defiant. But York is absolutely comical. History has it, according to my informants, that the York wall has never withstood siege. It is little wonder. We arrived to the sight of four little boys scurrying over the fortress wall with ease.
Another interesting place was York. Every Roman and medieval wall erected around

In York Minster I found a beautiful 1885 brass engraving by Elizabeth Eynnes, Lady in Waiting to Queen Elizabeth. So I took a rubbing of it. Brass rubbing is a simple art and one of the best souvenirs that can be obtained. Each rubbing contains a bit of history, a bit of the traveler's memory, and a bit of personal attachment that can only be given to something which is a do-it-yourself project.

Back at the Wall in London, the accommodations are unbelievable, and we shall all be quite spoiled when we have to leave. All have modern private rooms, central heating, desks, and the works.

Driver Cited After Accident in City

One driver was cited by Medford police as a result of investigation of two non-injury vehicle accidents in the city Thursday.

Walter Wayne Lester, 52, of Route 4, box 457, was cited for failure to yield the right of way after his car collided with a vehicle operated by Dale Robert Schalow, 19, of 1723 Stewart ave., about 1:03 p.m. at Sixth and Front sts.

No citations were issued in another collision also at Sixth and Front sts. about 11:33 a.m. Drivers involved were Merton Myron Maryott, 82, of 508 Palm st., and John Josiah McDaniel, 82, of box 969, Old Stage rd.

Officers Thursday issued a citation for failure to leave information at the scene of an accident to Rex Alvin Nicodemus, 48, of 43 North Holly st. The citation was the result of an investigation into an incident on Tuesday in which a city parking meter on Main st. between Grape and Holly sts. was struck and damaged by a vehicle.

Competition From Northwest Mills Stirs Southerners

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune
Washington Correspondent

Washington - (Special) - Southern lumbermen regard Pacific Northwest lumbermen as more threatening competitors than the Canadian firms, according to testimony received last week in a series of Senate Commerce Committee hearings in the South. The hearings were conducted at the request of Southern senators who wanted their region's point of view on record after the series of hearings on Northwest lumber problems held last year by the committee headed by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.).

The biggest issue, according to one observer who attended the hearings, was their insistence that no change be made in the Jones act, the long-standing law which requires American shippers in the coastwise or inter-coastal trade to use only American vessels. Northwest lumbermen want that law repealed so they can use cheaper foreign ships as the Canadians use to haul green lumber to the Atlantic coast ports which absorb much of the American domestic demand for lumber.

The attitude of the southern witnesses, in hearings at Columbia, S. C., and Atlanta, Ga., indicated they feared that if the Jones act were lifted that mills in Oregon and Washington would take away some of their eastern markets for Southern pine because of the lower transportation rates. They feared that if water hauling costs are cut, the railroads would be forced to reduce their rates for lumber from the Northwest to the Atlantic coast.

Bill Given Approval
Magnuson's committee last August approved a bill endorsed by the Kennedy Administration giving the Secretary of Commerce authority to suspend the Jones act temporarily when he found foreign competition hurting domestic industry.

But Magnuson agreed to withhold taking the bill to the Senate until the Southern point of view could be obtained in subsequent hearings. Last week Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.), a committee member, presided over the hearings in Columbia, Atlanta and Shreveport, La.

After Magnuson set aside the Jones act bill, Sen. Maurice B. Neuberger (D-Ore.) got an amendment attached to another maritime bill by which lumber bound for Puerto Rico could be hauled in foreign ships if approved by the Secretary of Commerce. Secretary Luther Hodges has since then approved several applications from Northwest lumber operators, permitting them to get back into Puerto Rico where Canada had in
