Power of Prayer Emphasized In Filming of Peal's Life

Some four years after reading in The Reader's Digest excerpts from Arthur Gordon's successful book, "Minister to Millions," Producer Frank Ross has set his cameras turning on a major motion picture inspired by the volume.

The film chronicles events in the life of one of America's most influential citizens, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, the onetime Detroit crime reporter who turned to the ministry and won worldwide recognition as author of "The Power of Positive Thinking."

Maker of "The Robe," Mr. Ross does not take his filmmaking lightly. He hews to no crowded schedule of production, and averages only one picture every three years.

"The Story of Norman Peale" is an unusual cinema venture because it deals with the experiences of a man still very much alive and active. Moreover, in this age of sensationalized cinema, with themes too frequently running the gamut from perversion to crime, Mr. Ross has chosen to film an entertainment presentation on the efficacy of prayer.

The picture will include excerpts from several of the sermons which have made Dr. Peale's ministry, including his tenure at New York's Marble Collegiate Church, so notable, but it is also calculated to cast new light upon the ministry as a profession.

Eleanor Griffin, who wrote "A Man Called Peter," and John Block have fashioned a script warm in humor and gay romance which details Dr. Peale's childhood resentment of the ministry (his father was a country preacher), his experiences as a crime reporter on a Detroit newspaper, and his wooing of Ruth Stafford while she was yet a college student. It goes on to depict their marriage and the events which led to and followed publication of his book, one of the publishing phenomena of modern times.

Indeed, the book's popular success speeded indictment of its author by many peers whose sincerity and viewpoints he respected, creating a highly dramatic crisis recorded in the film.

Following his reading of the article in The Reader's Digest four years ago, Mr. Ross flew to New York to discuss with Dr. Peale the possibility of using the Gordon book as basis for a motion picture. Dr. Peale approved of what Mr. Ross hoped to accomplish with such a film, and gave him access to personal papers, writings, family records and audiotape transcripts of sermons. Since he speaks without notes or manuscript, these transcriptions have been of great value.

To play the title role Mr. Ross chose Don Murray, who not only starred in but also wrote the much-discussed film, "The Hoodlum Priest." From television and Broadway, where she has contributed noteworthy stage characterizations in "Look Back in Anger" and "Sweet Bird of Youth," he cast Diana Hyland as Ruth Stafford Peale. This is her feature film debut.

A firm believer in the American film industry, Mr. Ross scheduled filming of the entire "Peale" undertaking in the Los Angeles area.

The director is Denis Sanders, who came to Hollywood's attention through the simple expedient of winning an Academy Award almost before anyone in the motion picture community knew he existed.
