Cleanup Days Set By Cemeteries

Cleanup days in preparation for Memorial Day have been planned this week end by two cemeteries, Jacksonville and Stearns' on Wagner creek. Commissioners of the Jacksonville cemetery have invited relatives and friends to clean graves May 18 and 19 and again on May 25 and 26. An all day session Sunday, May 19, is scheduled at the Stearns' cemetery on Wagner creek at Talent. Persons planning to participate are asked to bring tools and sack lunches. Hoes, rakes and shovels will be needed. If weather conditions are not favorable Sunday, the cleanup will be postponed until the following Sunday.

May 26, Mrs. Herman Somner reported, she may be reached at 535-1773 if anyone wishes additional information, she said. Commissioners of the Jacksonville cemetery are asking people to pile debris near one of the road ways to add ease to cleaning the entire cemetery. The Rev. William McLeod, secretary of the commissioners, stated. People are asked to use paper cartons for flowers in decorating the graves so they can be picked up and burned later. No glass or metal containers should be used. People should check with the sexton before placing flowers on unmarked graves, Mr. McLeod said.

Grange News

Sams Valley Grange The Sams Valley Grange was host to Grange of Jackson county at a meeting in the Sams Valley Grange hall recently. Shady Cove brought the traveling agate, and gave the opening drill. Shady Cove Grange Master John Minor had charge of the opening exercises and the meeting was then turned over to Master Ernest Radomski of Sams Valley Grange. Reports were given by the members of the executive board. Albert Straus, legislative, urged all members to write or wire the State Legislature to pass the bill which will protect the small distributors of milk and the dairy men. Victor Croxton called attention to the secretary's report on the dynamite bill just passed and reminded Grangers that the bill originated in the Upper Applegate Grange, and that Granges are a means in having a voice in our government. Dalton Staus reported on the growth in population in the Sams Valley area, and of plans being made for future expansion of school buildings. HEC Chairman Bessie Davis invited Grangers and friends to a picnic Sunday, May 19, at 12:30 p.m. at the Valley on the Rogue State park, five miles west of Gold Hill at the entrance on the north side of the river. Those attending are asked to take a picnic lunch and table service for members of their family. Coffee will be furnished by the Sams Valley Grange. Pomona Master Mel Lattie discussed constitution revisions contemplated by the state legislature. He urged all present to write and ask for the joint resolution No. 1 of the House. Sams Valley Lecturer Mrs. Martha Schulz presented a program which included vocal solos by Mrs. Thelma Gowan and a skit by Edgar Pleasant with Mr. and Mrs. Lucky Baldwin. The Black Lighters, a group of dancers from Medford, provided entertainment. There were 211 Grangers present at the meeting, including 98 officers of the various Granges. Live Oak Grange had the most members present with Eagle Point Grange second. Roscoe Roberts, State Overseer, talked on the advantages of Grange Insurance and reviewed what is offered by the non-profit organization in different types of insurances.

Tipton Orchestra Presents Fitting Climax to Season

By RICHARD D. WERNER The final concert of the current season of Jackson County Civic Music association last night at the high school auditorium was given by the Tipton Chamber orchestra. It was a fitting climax to a very successful season. Under the direction of Albert Tipton, who was also flute soloist, these players produced music of warmth and charm seldom heard in these parts. The ensemble was perfect, as befits musicians of their caliber. The choice of music played was out of the ordinary, the program well balanced with many, many high spots. To build a program is an art in itself and Tipton proved his mettle with the one he brought us last night. There was just enough of everything for as well balanced and various a selection as could be made. It also helped that he did not have to consider playing difficulties. This group can play whatever he puts in front of them. The "Aria and Presto" by Marcello was a most fitting opening. Scored for strings and in the baroque style of the 17th century it was played with clarity, precision and a finesse essential to the revealing of its inner beauties. We knew from this that we were going to hear a group play beautifully and with understanding and superb musicianship. For the second number Tipton chose to play from a suite by Durante, a contemporary of Bach. This is music not very well known and we are glad the conductor took the time to rearrange it even to including the English horn. His mixing of the color of the English horn and cello in the melodic line was most exquisite. Incidentally, the cello soloist was quite equal to the demands of blending with the English horn and vice versa.

This is the kind of rearranging we are in need of and we hope Tipton will do the rest of Durante's music that he has uncovered. Plays Mozart Concerto Mary Norris (Mrs. Tipton) played a not very well known Mozart concerto for piano delicately, and as Mozart would say, "with taste." Her playing throughout the concert was distinguished by this quality of taste. After intermission, the orchestra played a simple symphony by Britten. This is a very entertaining piece and it would be well if more high school orchestras played it. It is not too difficult and a lot better than having these children wrestle with Sibelius and Tchaikowski in attenuated arrangements. The concertino by Wykes for flute and oboe solo is contemporary music (?). Written for Tipton we presume that he programmed it out of loyalty and perhaps because he feels audiences should hear some of this kind of stuff. But our experience has been that they are confused and after it is over are bewildered. But if one closed one's eyes it was very easy to imagine it being used for "Route 66" or "Naked City." The flutist's beautiful playing was wasted on the piece. But "Poem for Flute" by Griffes was quite a different thing. Here is music by an American that has the stamp of greatness. And the soloist played it like great music. His tone and phrasing were all of the highest standard. He is not only a virtuoso but an artist as well. Small wonder that he had to play an encore. And his choice was two movements by the Frenchman Godard. Those French know how to write for the flute. The final selection on the program was "Perpetual Motion" by Ries. This is a violin solo and Tipton's arrangement was most brilliant. Not as difficult as the one by Paganini, it has enough rough spots in it to keep any fiddle player busy. The audience really liked it. For an encore Tipton played Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumble Bee." This is pure fire and all audiences go for it. We hope the orchestra will come back soon. Their kind of music is filling a void in the life of Americans and they are serving the cause of permanent music in a most satisfactory way.
