Klamath Falls — Campground and road construction projects planned for construction on the Winema forest have recently been announced and bids have been called for by the regional forester.

In the Lake of the Woods area it is planned to reconstruct portions of the road along the east side of the lake and provide a new entrance onto the Dead Indian highway.

Also included in this project is additional surfacing for the campground roads at Aspen Point. Interested contractors should submit their bids not later than 4 p.m., June 11, to the Regional forester, Box 3632, Portland.

A second project offered for bid in the Lake of the Woods area will involve a new entrance to the eastside summer home area. Bids for this contract will be received not later than 1 p.m., June 14, by the Regional forester.

A third contract is being offered for construction of a campground road at Miller lake in the northern part of Klamath county west of Chemult. Bids on this job will be received on June 11 at 3 p.m.

All of the proposed contracts involve improvements to the recreation facilities on the Winema forest and are part of the continuing development program of this resource.

Those interested in details on these jobs may secure plans and specifications from the office of the Forest Supervisor, 411 Main st., Klamath Falls, or the Office of the Regional Forester, 729 Northeast Oregon st., Portland.

Roughneck Daltons To Headline Mat Program

Southern Oregon wrestling fans will see two of the most colorful matmen now campaigning in the west when the Dalton Brothers — Jack and Jim — come to the Medford armory arena Thursday night. They made a big hit with local fans when they appeared here in March and their return is being made at the request of many who saw them in their only other appearance here.

Promoter Elton Owen has signed them to appear in their specialty — a tag team match. The Daltons hold the northwest tag team championship but their crown will not be at stake Thursday night.

Owen lined up two outstanding muscle stretchers to oppose the roughneck Daltons. They are Rocky Colombo, Pacific coast junior heavyweight champion, and Andy Drapp, a newcomer to the local ring.

Drapp is a big, handsome bruiser whose style and all-around general ability make him a good partner for Colombo.

Under tag team rules, only one man from each team may be in the ring at any one time. A wrestler may be relieved on the mat whenever he is tagged over the top rope by his partner. The Daltons aren't expected to pay much attention to tag team rules, thus creating a busy evening for the referee.

Catalina George Drake, a local favorite a few years ago, returns to take on veteran Soldat Gorky in the semi-windup. One other match completes the card, which will start at 8:30 p.m.

Just over 45,800 mule and black-tailed deer were tallied by district biologists of the game commission on 5,300 miles of sample routes during late winter and spring in the annual study to determine trends in the big game population. The miles traveled were covered on foot, horseback, automobile, and airplane. The only herd on which data is incomplete is the Interstate herd. The count here will continue for two or three weeks yet as the herd migrates from California into Oregon.

UP AND DOWN
On a state-wide basis, black-tail deer trends were up slightly from a year ago, while mule deer trends were down slightly from a year ago. On 2,148 miles of sample route on the blacktail ranges the deer observed averaged out at 5.0 deer per mile compared to 4.8 deer per mile in 1962. Mule deer trends in 1962. Mule deer trends in central Oregon averaged out at 11.1 deer per mile compared to 11.9 a year ago. Inventories were made on 3,159 miles of sample route on mule deer winter ranges.

Biologists pointed out that fluctuations occurred on most ranges with some above the trends of 1962, while others were below the trends of 1962. Also reported was the widespread dispersal of big game on most ranges throughout the winter. In addition, many animals spent the winter high in the mountains on their normal summer range. Game officials feel the wide dispersal at high elevation may have influenced the trend counts on some ranges since most of the permanent sample routes do not extend into big game summer areas.

In northwestern Oregon, blacktail samples averaged out identical to those of 1962, at 3.7 deer per mile. Populations were up slightly in the Wilson, Polk, Alsea, Clatsop, and Nestucca; identical in the McKenzie unit; and down slightly in the Trask, Siuslaw, and Santiam. The blacktails also were up slightly in Hood River and Wasco units from a year ago.

In southwestern Oregon, the overall blacktail trend was down slightly from 5.8 deer per mile in 1962 to 5.7 in 1963. In this region, populations were the same as the

Storms Delay Everest Climbers

Katmandu, Nepal — (UP) — Storms have delayed an American mountain-climbing team working its way up the unexplored west ridge of Mt. Everest, scattered its equipment and caused a depletion of precious oxygen supplies.

This may cause the cancellation of a planned two-team rendezvous Wednesday on top of the 29,248-foot peak, an expedition spokesman said here Sunday.

"The west ridge team is severely delayed," the spokesman said. "The summit meeting may be dropped."

He said a second team attempting to scale Mt. Everest by the better known south (pass) route was "on schedule."

Its American members, Barry C. Bishop, 30, Washington, and Luther G. Jerstad, 26, Eugene, Ore., moved up Sunday from Advance Camp 3 at 23,000 feet to Camp 4 at 24,900 feet. They expect to make a final assault Wednesday from Camp 6 at 27,400 feet.
