Alaskan Rivers Force Evacuations

Anchorage, Alaska - (UPI) - Raging flood waters of the Yukon river in central Alaska and the lower Kuskokwim river near the southeast coast forced hundreds of residents to flee their homes for higher ground today.

Nearly 200 persons, mostly women and children, were flown to Fairbanks aboard Air Force planes from the villages of Ruby, Koyukuk, Campion and Galena on the Yukon.

Emergency rations and medical supplies were flown from Galena to another river village, Nulato. At Koyukuk, the water was rising so fast that Air Force helicopters were forced to pick up evacuees with canvas slings because the helicopters had no dry ground space to land.

In both rivers the flooding was caused by huge ice jams that blocked the flow of water to the ocean.

Panelists Say Air Pollution Ordinance Should Be Guide

Panelist speakers on air pollution at an Izaak Walton League meeting last night agreed that big strides have been made in voluntary pollution control and any air pollution ordinances passed should guide, but not restrict.

Speakers were Stuart V. (Duke) McQueen, Kogap Lumber company, Medford; Halbert Deuel, Del Rio orchards; William Singler, Medford city councilman; and Earl M. Miller, Jackson county judge.

Lumber and fruit industry representatives pointed out that the voluntary air pollution control program has been carried beyond expectations in spite of comparatively low income the last few years.

Jack Hanel, of the Jackson county chapter, Izaak Walton league, predicted pulp mills would be able to come into the valley without polluting the air or water. McQueen said it may be 25 years away, but it is coming. A mechanical process instead of a chemical process will be used for pulp and paper production, he predicted.

Group Would Take Stand Col. Paul H. Weiland, league member, said the day is coming when the sportsmen's group would take a stand on air pollution.

Councilman Singler invited both fruit and lumber industry representatives to attend the next city council meeting June 6 when the city's air pollution control ordinance will be considered.

The city should have consulted the county when drawing up the ordinance, Singler said. Much of the air pollution comes from outside the city. Medford should assume the major financial burden in air pollution control enforcement, but not all of it, he added.

Since the county has been able to share in proceeds from government timber sales to private industry no tax has been levied for county government support for the last six years, McQueen emphasized in pointing out the importance of the lumber industry to the local economy.

Difficult To Market Eventually all of the log will be utilized, but the distance from major population centers makes it difficult to market lumber byproducts, McQueen pointed out. Both pulp chips and bark mulch require large population markets. Pulp chips now are shipped about 300 miles to market with the railroad getting most of the profit.

"Few tall smokestacks belch forth clouds of black smoke from the valley's lumber industry now," the lumber company official said. "A great number of residue burners have been eliminated. But we need more technology and further utilization of by-products."

Public pressure forced the orchardists to start the conversion to less smoke producing heaters after the 1954 catastrophic freeze, Orchardist Deuel said. To date 84 per cent of the heaters have been converted with 100 per cent expected year after next. Conversion is a little ahead of schedule, Deuel said.

Citations Planned For Jaywalkers

Central Point - Citations will be issued to jaywalkers and to motorists who fail to yield right of way to pedestrians, according to Ed Zander, chief of police in Central Point.

Two auto-pedestrian accidents have occurred recently in Central Point, neither in a crosswalk. Crosswalks are designed for safeguarding pedestrians, he continued and parents should emphasize their use to children.

Since the freeway has opened, traffic on Pine st. has increased by 20 per cent, Zander said. This makes a hazardous situation, particularly when either the motorist or pedestrian fails to obey traffic ordinances, he added.

Crosswalks in the business section have been repainted and street crews are in the process of painting walks beyond the downtown area.

Members of the street department are making a study of dangerous intersections in Central Point. One of the most hazardous is the intersection of Second and Third st. at Hazel st. where Allie Marthal Oldham was fatally injured in an accident Saturday evening, he said.

Tentative Approval Given Budget for GP

Grants Pass - The Grants Pass council has given its tentative approval to a $1,482,849 budget for the 1963-64 fiscal year submitted by the city budget committee.

The figure does not include the water department budget of $260,750.

A public hearing on the budget will be held June 19. City Manager Roy Eames estimated the tax rate for city purposes would be held to approximately 20 mills, which would be 1.1 mills under the 6 per cent limitation.
