

Natural Gas This Fall Is Assured

Natural gas for southern Oregon this fall was assured by the action of the Federal Power Commission recently.

E. K. Albert, president of California - Pacific Utilities company, announced that word has been received that the FPC had issued its order adopting its examiner's decision of April 18.

"This is the long awaited go signal to permit El Paso Natural Gas company to construct 127 miles of mainline from Eugene to Grants Pass, and for California - Pacific Utilities company to build 53 miles of mainline from Grants Pass to Ashland," Albert said.

Natural gas will first be received in Roseburg, Grants Pass, Medford, Phoenix, Talent and Ashland where manufactured gas is now served through the mains of CPU, Oakland, Sutherlin, Winchester, Winston, Myrtle Creek, Riddle, Canyonville, Gledale, Rogue River, Gold Hill, Central Point, White City and Jacksonville are scheduled for natural gas later.

"The right-of-ways have nearly all been secured and the engineering will be finished immediately. We will start laying pipe very shortly for we intend to meet our goal of serving natural gas through our mains this fall," Albert added.

SAFETY FIRST—Actress Vera Felton isn't about to take any chances, even in her rocking chair which she has equipped with a seat belt. Miss Felton also recommends seat belts be installed in automobiles. The belts are optional equipment for rocking chairs, but are highly recommended by all safety councils for auto driving safety. Commissioner Says He'd Favor Closing Counties to Hunting

A report that John P. Amacher, member of the Oregon state game commission, from Winchester, has suggested that Klamath and Deschutes counties be closed to hunting in the fall, was received with enthusiasm Thursday night by the Jackson county chapter of the Oregon Fish and Game Council, according to Walter Craig, president.

The meeting was held at the Central Point Sportsmen's club.

Members of the Jackson county chapter, Craig said, will go along with this recommendation and give it full support if the game commission allows no "doe shoot" in the remaining Eastern Oregon ranges.

Allotted 500,000 Acres

The Oregon Fish and Game Council, Craig reported, has been allotted 500,000 acres in eastern Oregon by ranchers, who have given the Council authority to close the acreages to hunting if the state game commission laws show no sign of changing May 24 at a hearing on tentative game laws for the coming year.

If the commission allows the continuance of does and special seasons, Craig stated, the ranchers have said the Council is authorized to close the range.

The next meeting of the Oregon Fish and Game Council has been moved up to June 1, Craig announced, to enable a full discussion of the tentative game laws before the final adoption June 7. The Jackson county chapter will be well represented at the hearing in Portland May 24, he said.

Chauncey Florey of Central Point has been elected as director in the Oregon Fish and Game Council as the representative from Jackson county.

A resolution passed at the state meeting in Bend, urging Gov. Mark O. Hatfield to ask for the resignations of all members of the Oregon state game commission, was read at the Central Point meeting.

It states: "Be it resolved that whereas for several years the Oregon state game commission has progressively liberalized the killing of does and fawns, both as to numbers and length of hunting seasons; that such policies have brought the deer herds to the verge of destruction; that big game management, delegated by the legislators to the Oregon state game commission, has been, in substance, further delegated by the commission to special interests which desire to destroy the deer; that scores of thousands of citizens have petitioned Your Excellency and the legislature to take corrective action; that no such action has been taken; that, from all available evidence, it appears that the commission is wrongfully determined to continue to manage the deer herd solely in accordance with the wishes of private interests, it is accordingly resolved that Your Excellency be respectfully asked to request the immediate resignations of all of the members of the Oregon state game commission."

The resolution carries the names of Clifford E. Milhorn, president, Oregon Fish and Game Council, and W. M. Kellem, secretary-treasurer.

Children Who Steal Necessitate Firm Action by Parents

BY DAVID NYDICK
 UPI Education Specialist

Parents and teachers often are faced with the problem of children who steal. How should it be handled?

The answer depends in part on the child's age. Children below the age of three who take items which do not belong to them ordinarily do not understand what ownership means. Their experiences with toys, etc. lead them to believe that everything is shared. Don't get upset when a child of this age takes someone else's property. You should explain that the item is not theirs and should be returned. Perhaps you can bring out the difference between sharing and ownership. It is important that you realize that the child will probably not be able to develop a full understanding.

In the three to five year age group children should be developing increased respect for their own as well as other's property. During this period, they will become more independent of you. As they learn to get along with their friends, a need to respect other people's property will grow. Additional guidance should be used when incidents of stealing occur.

Above the age of six, children should have sufficient knowledge to recognize that they are doing wrong when they steal. In this age group children tend to steal secretly and hide the objects. They will probably deny the act. When this happens, you must be particularly firm. Explain that you love the child but do not approve of this behavior and will not permit it.

There are a great variety of reasons why children might steal. Children who are deprived may resort to stealing if the need becomes strong enough. Of course, stealing is by no means limited to the needy. Children who appear to have everything are just as guilty of this objectionable behavior. When children are lonesome or unhappy, they may turn to stealing. Sometimes the cause is a lack of a warm relationship with parents.

Don't Humiliate Child

The basis for such actions may be analyzed. An individual might be trying to gain attention or attempting to get even for treatment he feels is unfair. Regardless of the reason stealing is not acceptable. The child should not be humiliated. A great deal of care should be taken to make sure that he has stolen something before he is accused.

If the stealing continues as the child grows older, finding the cause then becomes quite important. Persistent behavior of this nature indicates a need for psychological assistance from a guidance center or other qualified professional.
