Yreka Firm Buys Klamath Timber

Yreka - Reynen - Cowning Lumber company, Yreka, was high bidder for 8,150,000 board feet of Klamath National forest timber in an auction in Yreka recently.

The sale, known as the Hungry Creek unit, is located in the Beaver creek drainage in the Yreka working circle. Six timber operators submitted sealed bids, which are required to qualify for oral bidding. Five of the operators participated in the bidding.

Harry Hopkins, of Klamath National forest, announced volumes, high bid rates and appraisal rates as follows: 2,100,000 board feet of ponderosa pine bid at $17 per thousand and appraised at $10.45; 750,000 board feet of sugar pine bid and appraised at $12.40 per thousand; 650,000 board feet of white fir bid at $5.50 per thousand and appraised at $2.95; 4,000,000 board feet of Douglas fir bid and appraised at $10.85; and 850,000 board feet of incense cedar bid and appraised at $2.30 per thousand. Total bid value was $93,470, compared to an appraised value of $78,057.

Trichomoniasis

According to a recent article by Drs. H. C. Hessel-tine and Yves Lefebvre, of the University of Chicago School of Medicine, trichomoniasis, while it doesn't kill people, causes perhaps 800,000 women in this country a great deal of distress. Sometimes it breaks up a marriage because the woman's sex-life becomes painful. The disease is caused by a microscopic parasite, Tricho, in Greek, means a hair, and so a trichomonad is a single-celled animalcule which has a few hair-like extensions which enable it to move itself around.

Some women have a few of the parasites without any symptoms, while others suffer greatly, and have to keep taking treatment for months or a year or two. If only all of the parasites could easily be reached, let us say by a douche of vinegar and water, they would instantly be killed. But some of them hide in places which cannot be reached by a douche. There are suppositories which contain a drug which could quickly kill the parasites - again - if it could only reach all of them.

A point which in many cases is essential is that the husband be checked, because if he carries the parasite it is useless to try to cure his wife without, at the same time, curing him.

Some patients can get immediate relief if their physician will give them some Carbarone. I prescribe from 3 to 6 tablets taken at breakfast time, once a week or so. Now, Dr. Hessel-tine and Dr. Lefebvre are enthusiastic about a new drug; they say they have had excellent results with it, but as yet the Food and Drug Administration people have not released it for sale in drug stores.

It might be safe if it would be used - not three times a day for weeks, but in one big dose, once a week. The one big dose is much more likely to kill the parasites than is a long series of small doses; also one big dose taken occasionally will rarely produce unpleasant side effects.

Boys Who Make Gunpowder or Rockets

In a recent release, the American Medical Association remarked that three youths were killed because of an explosion of a mixture of chemicals which they had been working with - hoping to perfect a fuel for rockets.

Amateur rocketry has caused many serious accidents, and although parents should be very glad that they have a boy of the type who wants to study chemistry at home, they should keep enough of an eye on what he is doing to dissuade him from trying to make gunpowder or build rockets. Many a youngster has been blinded by his efforts along these lines.

Quite a few chemical mixtures are explosive, and some will blow up suddenly after standing for a time, which means that boys should not play with explosives. This is a terribly dangerous game - a game only for experts.

Many boys want to make some gunpowder, but the trouble is that it is likely to go off and either blow the boy's eyes out or else kill him.

Adam Clayton Powell—III

Controversial Congressman Convinced Attacks Being Made Because of Race

Editor's note: What is Adam Clayton Powell's greatest sin? In the eyes of his critics, he contends, it is simply that he is a Negro - a Negro who's won a place in the power structure. In the following dispatch, final of three on the controversial Harlem congressman, Powell gives his reaction to questions thousands have been asking.

By LOUIS CASSELS and ARNOLD SAWISLAK
Washington - (UPI) - Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) extracted a thin gold lighter from a special pocket of his expensively tailored jacket and applied flame to the end of a Churchill-sized cigar.

He settled back in a leather chair and smiled at two UPI reporters who had come to interview him in his congressional office, which overlooks the Capitol grounds from Room 459 of the old House Office Building.

It was the easy, confident smile of a veteran politician who figures he can take care of himself, no matter how pointed the questions may get.

Replies to Critics

"Mr. Powell," one of the newsmen began, "you have been under heavy fire recently from some of your own colleagues in Congress. They have accused you of abusing the privileges of your office by such practices as junketeering and nepotism. They have tried to clip your wings by slashing the budget of the House Education and Labor committee which you head.

"You have replied by charging your critics with racial prejudice. Do you really think that your only offense is that you are a Negro?"
"That's right," Powell replied. "I have said before and will say again, unequivocally, they are attacking me because I am a Negro. What is worse from their viewpoint, I am a Negro who's won a place in the power structure, as chairman of an important House committee. They can't forgive me for that."

Quite aside from any question of race, don't you think that your own personality, your rather flamboyant way of doing things, may have something to do with upsetting your colleagues?"

A. Yes, I'd agree with that. The things which other congressmen try to hide, I do right out in the open. I'm not a hypocrite.

Criticized Over Trip

An unusually heavy storm of criticism broke around Powell's head last summer when he left Washington in the midst of the congressional session to tour Europe with two women committee aides - one a white divorcee and the other a Negro beauty queen who was runner-up for Miss Universe.

Powell suggested that it was the bi-racial nature of his "staff" which made this trip so reprehensible in the eyes of his critics.

"Despite all of the wisecracks that were made," he said, "I did go to Europe to study the Common Market, and I filed a long and detailed report on the impact of the Common Market on U. S. labor."

Q. Don't you think there are some Americans who disapprove of congressional junkets on principle, who just don't want to see their lawmakers, regardless of color, taking plush vacations at government expense?"

A. Well, I think we ought to make it clear that not one penny of U. S. tax funds was spent on my trip to Europe or on most such congressional trips. They are financed entirely out of the "counterpart funds" which are built up in various countries under the foreign aid program. The money's there and it doesn't cost the taxpayers anything for us to use it. I think travel is good for congressmen. It is a very broadening educational experience, and all congressmen should take advantage of opportunities to see the world. Most of them do, too. The only ones who don't go on these so-called "junkets" are the ones who are afraid of planes.

Q. What about this business of putting your wife on the congressional payroll at a salary of nearly $13,000 a year, even though she's living down in Puerto Rico?

A. She earns her salary by answering the letters I get from my Puerto Rican constituents in Harlem. I have no apology to make about putting a relative on the payroll. The only difference between me and my colleagues on this matter is that I'm not a hypocrite about it.

Q. Do you see no wrong in nepotism?

A. I think nepotism is a wonderful thing until congressional salaries are increased.

Q. How do your constituents react to stories about how you're living it up in Washington, Paris and Puerto Rico?

A. They love me for it. They enjoy it vicariously with me. I'm just doing the things they'd do if they were in Congress.

Throughout the interview, Powell had remained relaxed, amiable and unruffled. But he tensed a bit when the questioning shifted to his role as pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist church in Harlem.

One of the reporters commented that Powell's personal code of morality - including his well-publicized fondness for fine wines, expensive night clubs, fast cars and pretty women - "seems to differ somewhat from the norm" of the Baptist ministry.

Powell smilingly acknowledged that he is not a typical Baptist preacher. But he said with sudden seriousness that "I really believe in the kind of ministry I've practiced for 33 years."

"I believe that the practice of brotherhood is the fundamental demand of Christianity," he said. "I believe the church has been burdened with too much emphasis on piousness matters of personal morality, and has neglected the more important matter of fighting for racial and social justice."

He said his religious attitudes are now based entirely on the so-called "Jefferson Bible," a compilation of the sayings of Jesus Christ which was made by Thomas Jefferson.

"I can't find anything in the sayings of Jesus against moderate drinking, dancing and card-playing," Powell said. "But I do find a great deal that He said against hating and turning your back on your brother."

Q. Doesn't the Jefferson Bible include the words of Jesus about divorce being wrong, and remarriage of a divorced person the equivalent of adultery? How do you square that passage with your three marriages and two divorces?

Powell paused for a long moment before answering. "I won't make any rationalizations," he said at last. "I think the concept of lifelong marriage laid down by Jesus is absolutely correct. In this day and time, it is a hard law to follow, but it is a good one, and I stand guilty of having broken it."

State Police Check Two Valley Mishaps

State police reported two accidents Monday.

A pickup truck driven by Ernest Otto Zeisler, 40, of route 1, box 187A, Gold Hill, and a car driven by Kenneth Lee Webber, 23, Prospect, collided on the Jacksonville highway, officers said.

A logging truck driven by Keith William Bros, 22, of 1826 Kings highway, Medford, and a car driven by Kareia Joann Aeschliman, 19, of 429 Benson st., Medford, sideswiped at Table Rock and Schulz rds. The truck went into a ditch and turned over on its side, police said.
