Sugar Prices Soar Sharply in Stores As Shortage Looms

By United Press International
 Sugar prices soared in stores across the nation today in what could eventually mean an end to the five-cent candy bar.
 "We don't know where it will stop," said one chain store official in Dallas, Tex., as the price of sugar climbed to 89 cents for five pounds.
 The hike in prices - and the run on sugar - seemed to involve a complicated world situation that was beyond the understanding of many home-makers caught up in the effects.
Crop Failures Blamed
 The cause of the shortage was crop failure last year in many sugar producing countries, plus some labor trouble in Hawaii. The disappearance of Cuba's sugar from the Western market also was a factor, but Cuba also had crop failure last year.

 A wholesaler in Des Moines, Iowa, said the climbing prices would also affect beverages, canned goods and other items on shopping lists. The higher prices eventually could mean the end of the five-cent candy bar, too, he said, "unless it's the size of your thumbnail."
 In Chicago, Phil D. Missner, sales manager for Sugar Supply Corp., listed three prime reasons for the world shortage of sugar - the Cubans had a small crop because of poor management, two very poor winters in Europe caused poor harvests, and the so-called underdeveloped countries have become more prosperous and are increasing their trade demands.
Spurt in Stock Sales
 Rising raw sugar prices in New York touched off a spurt in the sale of Hawaii sugar agency stocks with gains ranging from $3 to as much as $10 a share. It was one of the most active trading days since 1959.
 In Washington, Lawrence Myers, director of the sugar policy staff of the Agriculture Department, wouldn't make a guess as to the length of any sugar shortage or the progress of the price spiral.
 He said the United States has all the sugar needed for current consumption. He said that when a hoarding movement begins, there is no way to tell how far it would go. Market experts in New York said the world-wide shortage would exist at least until sugar beet crops are harvested in both the United States and Europe in October.
