

Local Youth to Leave for Work in Peace Corps

states were represented in the class of 68 preparing for the Thailand assignment at the University of Indiana, Albert said.

There were three Negroes and one Japanese and all members of the class but one had at least a bachelor's degree from a university or college. A number of the candidates were people working for graduate degrees. Albert placed the average age at 23, the oldest member of the class was 36, he recalled.

He found that he was the only member of the class from Oregon but many states were represented with Californians outnumbering residents of other states.

Interested Instructor Kenneth Landon, one of the foremost authorities on Southeast Asia, whose wife wrote "Anna and the King of Siam," was one of the most interesting instructors. His Excellency Y. V. Artyayaki, Thailand's ambassador to the United States, spent several days with the class and presided at the graduation ceremony.

"He was very helpful," Albert said, "as were all the instructors, who kept the training on a high level. All the language instructors, the Medford appointee said, were natives of Thailand. One of the prime considerations of the government in choosing the University of Indiana as training ground for the Thailand assignments is the maintenance there of the Thai language department.

An exchange program is carried on with the country. Many Thailand students come to Bloomington to study and work. The language faculty. There are probably 50 students from Thailand at the university now, according to Albert. Some are working for their doctor of philosophy degrees. The university sends several faculty members to Thailand to study each year.

Many of the Thailand students are women. The people of the country are progressive in this respect, Albert believes. Some are women who have left their husbands in Thailand while they study at the university.

"They emphasize the Buddhist tenet," Albert explained, "of self discipline and self reliance."

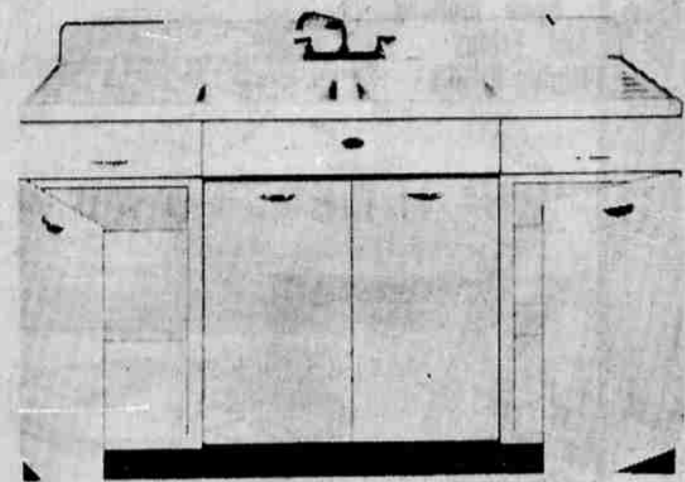

Has Great Respect Albert has already taken all the immunization shots required for international travel and he has started taking his malaria pills, malaria preventative, and will continue taking the pills throughout the time he is in Thailand.

There is a malaria eradication program going on now, however, in Thailand, the Medford Peace Corps member stated.

BIRDING

Judging from the telephone calls received during April and May, many wild life observers noticed the presence of large flocks of American goldfinch and pine siskin in the valley.

Other oddities during this period included the sighting of a gray jay on April 17 near Talent by Mrs. L. Tompkins, and the landing of a snowy egret on a small pond near Ashland on May 6 as reported by J. Reynolds.

On May 2, 3, and 4, about 5,000 cliff swallows and 12 purple martins roosted near the game commission area before proceeding on their migration.

Perhaps it was the storms in the mountains that caused the gray jay and the purple martin to descend to the valley as this is the first report of their ever leaving the high country for our valley. As to why the much larger than usual flocks of pine siskin and goldfinch, I have no logical answer. Each spring, however, there seems to be one or two species that are unusually abundant during migration.

The number of migrant species that arrive the last week in April and the first week in May is surprising.

This year the following migrants were tallied during this period: MacGillivray's warbler, Wilson warbler, black-throated gray warbler, Nashville warbler, yellow throat, Townsend's warbler, yellow-breasted chat, hermit warbler, yellow warbler, rock wren, black-headed grosbeak, Bullock's oriole, western tanager, Trail's flycatcher, western flycatcher, western wood pewee, western kingbird, ashthroated flycatcher, Vaux swift, lazuli bunting, and callopie hummingbird. Most of the warblers passed through Medford, this year 60 Vaux swifts were seen over East Main st., on May 8.

Although part of this period was wet and stormy, nesting seemed to progress as usual. Timmie on Rogue River drive and in Medford hatched out their young on May 13. The Bullock's orioles began building their nests near the Rogue River on May 15. On May 17, I found two blue gray gnatcatchers that had just completed building their nest. Their nest is very similar to a hummingbird's nest, only a little larger and covered with lichen.

E. Lauber reported on May 20 that Western tanagers were building a nest near his home in Medford. C. Richardson put out a dozen bluebird nesting boxes near Ashland, and he has four bluebirds in them. He has four bluebirds on the Rogue with no bluebird utilization, that are being used by tree swallows. There are, however, two pairs of western bluebirds that nest in the oaks along Agate Road.

May 6 was a particularly good birding day at Hoover Lake. There were four dunlins, Bonaparte gull, six ring-billed gull, 60 white-fronted geese, and an unusual large flock of 45 long-billed dowitchers. Again on May 20 I found an avocet, a black tern, four dunlin, a yellow-headed blackbird and two Wilson's phalaropes at Hoover. Both of these counts were made early in the morning, at other times, I have found the lake area almost deserted except for nesting cinnamon and bluewinged teal.

Mrs. L. Tompkins and Mrs. G. Hartley on May 6 visited the south side of the Lower Klamath lake wildlife refuge. They reported seeing large numbers of long billed curlew, willet, avocet, grebe, grebe, and white-fronted geese. On the opening day of fishing season at Howard Prairie, H. Cannisto saw some sandhill cranes feeding near the west side of the lake. The cranes were the "little brown crane," a subspecies of the sandhill crane.

Each spring someone generally reports seeing a rare or unusual visiting migrant to this area. On May 15 Dr. and Mrs. F. Sturges saw two male and one female or juvenile hooded orioles near their home in Ashland. F. Sturges, who is a distinguished ornithologist and biologist, points out that this is a sight rarely seen.

He states that hooded orioles normally occur only in the southwestern part of the United States, therefore, additional sightings of specimens are necessary to establish positive identification. Apparently, knowing of the ability of Sturges, the distinctive marking of the hooded oriole, the mobility of bird, and the sighting with binoculars at a distance of only 60 feet, my vote is to credit Jackson county with a very rare visitor, the hooded oriole.

May 30 is bird count day for the McCannet-Bird Society. It will be interesting to compare the resulting count with that of last year. Certainly, the weather has been wetter and stormier at times than last year. Perhaps the comparison will give some idea just what effect the change in weather has on the bird population.

Defects Said Cause Of Many Problems In Children's Lives

By DAVID NYDYCK UPI Education Specialist Hearing and vision difficulties in children may go undetected for many years. Deafness, which is the cause of many other problems in children's academic, emotional, and social development.

What symptoms might lead you to suspect the possibility of a hearing or visual deficiency? A child who is having trouble with school work should receive a thorough examination. Many schools have regular screening programs designed to reveal hearing or visual handicaps. Screening methods are not meant to be thorough examinations. School equipment is not capable of uncovering all kinds of defects. The answer is to obtain a complete check-up by a specialist who is equipped and trained to diagnose and treat all types of hearing or visual problems.

Naturally there are some specific symptoms of which you should be aware. Children with visual defects often develop unusual reading habits such as holding written material particularly close or far from their eyes and squinting. At times they may be seen rubbing their eyes. Other indications might be head-tilting, head-turning, or head-bobbing. Frequent eye-irritations, and squinting. Although many of these symptoms may be a result of faulty eyesight, they also may be due to a variety of other causes. If there is any doubt, you should seek professional advice.

Hearing losses often are difficult to recognize. Their effects may be only noted in the specific types of listening situation. Be suspicious when a child needs constant repetition of spoken words, is more aware of movements than sounds, shows a strain when listening, turns one ear towards the speaker, is inattentive to speech, has poor pronunciation, has speech problems, has a peculiar quality to his voice, watches the speaker very carefully, and speaks too loudly or softly.
