Mao Tse-Tung

MAO TSE-TUNG—uncrowned emperor of China—will celebrate his 70th birthday this year. He is the absolute autocrat of 700 million people: more human beings than have ever been governed by one man in all recorded history.

He has given China its first strong, internally solid government since the 18th-century reign of the great Manchu emperor, Ch'ien Lung, and the shadow of his power lies darkly across the future.

But he is tormented by a growing sense of frustration and urgency. Time is running out, and power-hungry Mao has much to do. It is his destiny, he believes, to bring Communist "liberation" to yet other hundreds of millions of brown and yellow people in Southeast Asia, India, and the vast archipelago of Indonesia, to reconquer Formosa, reclaim Korea, and make Japan an industrial satellite of his new Chinese Empire. In doing so, he would acquire new sources of raw materials (especially oil) and new rice-growing areas to relieve his chronic food shortage.

This is a dangerous dream, and the dreamer is a coolheaded, calculating, exceptionally dangerous man. He knows that to achieve his dream he must defeat the power that shattered the Japanese dream of an Asian empire—the maritime power of the United States.

Our Mysterious Enemy

Who is the man eager to lead 700 million Chinese against the "paper tiger" United States? What caused his fanatical obsession with strength and ultimate war?
