Peace Offering Is Made by Morse to Senator From Ohio

By A. ROBERT SMITH, Mail Tribune

Washington Correspondent - Ever since Rep. Mike Kirwan (D-Ohio) took out after Oregon public works projects last summer following Sen. Wayne Morse's attack on Kirwan's pet project for a national aquarium, Oregonians have been puzzling over how they might get back into Kirwan's good graces.

They considered this of some importance because the powerful veteran congressman from Youngstown, Ohio, is virtually in charge of doling out millions of federal dollars annually through his high ranking position on the House Appropriations committee.

An Ohio colleague of Kirwan suggested arranging to have an Oregon college give him an honorary degree. Another suggestion was to have Oregonians make some noteworthy contributions to the Democratic congressional campaign committee, over which Kirwan proudly presides.

Makes Peace Offering

But Sen. Morse hopefully made a peace offering to Kirwan that is much more direct and to the point this week by defending a budget appropriation for Kirwan's aquarium from attack by another Ohioan with whom Kirwan has long feuded, Sen. Frank Lausche (D-Ohio).

It occurred during Senate consideration of the Interior appropriations bill which contained $310,000 for preliminary designs and planning of the aquarium to be located on the banks of the Potomac in the nation's capital. Sen. Lausche got up and moved to delete this amount for what he called "a fishpond" that will eventually cost $10 million. When the roll was called, Lausche's amendment was defeated 58-22.

In explaining his vote in behalf of the aquarium money, Morse recalled his opposition last year and said: "But the Senate overruled those who opposed it, and the committee on appropriations this year, passing upon the subject, fulfilled its responsibility and appropriated the funds necessary to accomplish the will of Congress and of the President. So once the question had been decided substantially, I felt that we must go ahead and build the aquarium, although I think it is a mistake to locate it in Washington.

Suggests Fund Review

The only move to cut back Oregon money this year came in Kirwan's committee report in March on that same Interior money bill when he suggested a review of the O&C forestland formula by which 18 western Oregon counties get 75 per cent of timber receipts and the federal treasury gets 25 per cent. During hearings on the bill, Kirwan had declared that this formula "should be changed" to reduce the counties' share.

This declaration alarmed the Oregon congressional delegation and O&C county officials. They recognized they might have difficulty withstanding a strong attack on this formula because national forest timber cutting returns only 25 per cent to the local counties and many congressmen who are accustomed to this practice would vote to reduce the O&C counties' share accordingly.

Along with Kirwan's suggestion was a reduction of $540,000 in the amount requested by the Bureau of Land Management for forestry management work on the O&C forests, plus a suggestion that this amount be taken out of the counties' share.

Rep. Robert B. Duncan (D-Ore.), after discussing the O&C issue with county and Interior Department officials, concluded that the counties had too much at stake to risk a fight on the floor of either House or Senate over this relatively modest sum. Interior officials indicated they might be able to absorb the cut so that it wouldn't hurt the counties at all. So they let it ride this year.

And now that Wayne Morse has helped save the money for the aquarium, perhaps there will be no problem about funds for Oregon projects in the future.

The girls will be judged on their ability to water ski, poise and beauty in both formal wear and bathing suits. Williams and the Ashland Chamber of Commerce have collaborated with the Rogue Aqua Ski club in planning a water show. ## THE WEEK IN CALIFORNIA

Major Tax Proposal Ready to Make Its First Appearance

By United Press International - Gov. Edmund G. Brown's major tax proposal - the withholding of state income taxes from paychecks in order to speed-up tax collections - was ready to make its first appearance with only three weeks of the 1963 legislative session remaining.

Awaiting the proposal, still in flat opposition, were the Republicans.

The first committee hearing on the measure, by Assemblyman Nicholas Petris (D-Oakland) was delayed Friday and was expected to get its first official airing early this week.

Unofficially, it has been aired for months.

Republicans said they would vote against the entire budget unless Brown removed the withholding feature, which Brown says would allow the state to escape new taxes for the coming year when coupled with his proposals to speed up collection of other taxes.

The latest flareup came as the result of a speech Brown made before state employees, in which he warned they may not get pay raises unless his program was adopted.

Five GOP assemblymen charged this constituted "strong arm tactics" and that members of local branches of the California employees association had been told, in effect, "if we get the withholding tax through, you get a raise."

A few days earlier, the first wide-open clash over the issue came when, after Brown had called Republican leaders into a private conference, he issued a statement charging he would not be "blackmailed" by the GOP into withdrawing the proposal.

Only hours after the meeting, the assembly GOP caucus voted unanimously to vote against the budget unless Brown withdrew the withholding feature.

While taxes promised to constitute the major area of debate in the waning days of the session, a fair housing bill advocated by Brown and civil rights groups drew attention when the state capitol building witnessed its first "sit in" demonstration.

Members of the congress of Racial Equality (CORE) began the silent demonstration when about 11 members sat down on the balcony-like second floor to protest a delay in committee action on the bill. The group grew to about 50 demonstrators after Brown greeted the group warmly as he passed them on the way to his office.

Percedan: The battle over a Senate committee's decision to kill a bill putting tighter reigns on the drug percedan almost a month ago still raged.

Atty. Gen. Stanley Mosk, who says percedan has become a major substitute for heroin, charged that the company that makes the drug used "deceptive tactics" to conceal the habit-forming qualities of the narcotic. He said that the Endo company, Richmond Hill, N.Y., also waged a "high powered campaign" against the bill. Mosk's charge was contained in a letter to Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) who had asked him about activities of the company in California.

He said the Federal Food and Drug administration should consider the company's "failure to present to the medical profession the addictive qualities of this drug and the toxic side effects."

Yorty: Los Angeles Mayor Samuel Yorty's attempt to purge the city council of foes in two recent councilman elections ended in an apparent stalemate. Yorty sought the defeat of three incumbents to four council seats and failed in two in a runoff. But this candidate won in the third against one of his more vocal enemies.

Even if Yorty backed candidates had won all three seats, the mayor would still not have had a clear-cut majority of supporters in the 15-man council. But he could have at least claimed a "mandate" from the people.

Drunks: Los Angeles released all 277 prisoners arrested for drunkenness after the State Supreme Court invalidated the city law under which they were arrested.

Police said many of the prisoners didn't want to leave the jail and appeared on the verge of tears when they were shown to the street. "A lot of them like it in jail," said one jailer. "They get three square meals a day and have a place to sleep. But it won't surprise me if a lot of them get thrown right back in."

Aspirin: The common aspirin tablet was charged with causing internal bleeding that could lead to ulcers and anemia by a Pennsylvania medical educator speaking in San Francisco. Dr. James Roth said studies had shown that 60 to 70 per cent of persons taking aspirin would lose as much as a teaspoonful of blood in the stomach after taking two aspirin.

He criticized the "indifferent complacency" of physicians who know of the potentially harmful affects of aspirin. "Although a teaspoonful isn't very much," he said, "it indicates that discrimination should be used in taking aspirin." He said bufferin or other compounds of aspirin were in the same category.

Deputies Investigate Reported Assault

Jackson county sheriff's deputies are investigating a reported assault and robbery of Robert V. Phares, Lazy Acres motel, Gold Hill, Friday night.

Phares told deputies he was riding in a car with two other men somewhere near the Rogue River Supper club on the Old Highway 99, the car pulled to the side of the road.

Phares was pushed out and one of the men assaulted him. Upon getting up Phares discovered his wallet containing credit cards and $80 in cash was missing, he told deputies.
