

New Seaside Shapes Challenge the Bikini

Cotton ticking stripes so salty in matching beach top, dashingly outlined in brilliant navy. The swimsuit can be worn as a dress or as a base for a cover-up for its amphibious partner, a two-piece with modest bra and low-slung trucks. Both by Cole of California.

Fashion's in the swim this summer with tide-stopping styles that provide coverage more or less as you like it. Newer seaside shapes are challenging the bikini's hold on the beach, driving it under a matching cover-up in most cases. More in favor, reports the National Cotton Council, are the new swim/play suits—1963's modified version of the two-piece swimsuit now designed to double as a play-suit.

Most often, these amphibious fashions feature a camisole top or a widened halter bra with little boy shorts. To interpret these versatile styles, designers are turning to unusual fabrics like patchwork-printed cotton shantung, clean plaid cottons, striped ticking, and cotton faille.

In the same vein is the tunic suit—long, lean, and modest. Made with a high-necked, high-backed sleeveless pullover and brief shorts, it looks feminine and frisky. In boldly striped knit cotton. Blouson Suit

Loose-fitting and flattering is the blouson suit, which turns up in one and two-piece versions. Both are destined to make a pretty splash on any beach this summer.

Still another silhouette—and one that's expected to begin a new trend—is the skirted swimsuit. With fluttering box-pleats or panels, it appears in floral-printed and striped polished cottons.

Mallots and sheaths remain in fashion favor; some with draped bodices, others with deep-cut backs.

The color story ranges from softened neutrals to vibrant tones. Prints go from vivid combinations to watery pastels that look as if they were painted below sea level.

Stylized twin prints are new for coordinating cotton swimsuits and beach shifts. They're seen either in small pastel florals or in bright, bold-flowering prints.

In addition to swimsuits with coordinated cover-ups, many will have their own matching terry beach towels.

The two-piece cotton swimsuit with camisole top and brief shorts is storming the beaches. Jantzen's version comes in yellow coral, or turquoise cotton faille.

A draped bodice gives a feminine look to this one-piece boy leg suit in woven cotton plaid. A Sea B design. It comes in new fashion colors of brown or green.

Woman Archeologist Says Columbus 'Timed It Right'

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

New York — Christopher Columbus was a Johnnie-come-lately to the New World, according to a woman student of archeology. Mrs. W. R. Irwin, of the faculty of the University of Iowa, has concluded from extensive research that the Phoenicians beat Columbus to Middle America by about 2,500 years.

It's accepted, she said, that the Vikings also discovered America ahead of Columbus, finding the North American continent about 1,000 A.D.

Mrs. Irwin's research on who was first is compiled into a fascinating chronicle of pre-Columbian culture in the Western Hemisphere. Called "Fair Gods and Stone Faces,"

Muffin Tray Is Useful for Serving Snacks

Does the menu call for hot dogs grilled over wood charcoal briquets? Then use one or more muffin tins to serve the trimmings. The bowl-shaped compartments are ideal to hold mustard, catsup, sauerkraut, chopped onions, chili and corn relish.

Small spoons in each compartment encourage diners to help themselves. The tray can be refilled in one trip to the kitchen.

A muffin tray also holds toppings for charcoal-roasted potatoes. Crumbled bacon, chopped onions, pats of butter, minced chives and cottage cheese are good choices. Use the tray to hold dips when snacks are grilled on the charcoal hibachi.

If the tray is a permanent patio utensil, you can decorate it with colored tape or other festive touches. It's a handy addition to all barbecue parties.

(St. Martin's Press) the book was eight years in research and writing, she said. It is her first work about a field which she said always had intrigued her—archaeology.

Until now, her writings mostly have been sports books for young people.

Timing Right
Mrs. Irwin isn't belittling Christopher Columbus. "His timing was right," she said in an interview during a visit to New York.

"The Phoenicians and the Vikings were too early," she said. "Columbus arrived at a time when the whole world was ready to expand and to colonize."

"The achievements of Columbus are many and our debt to him can never be lightly dismissed.

"From 1492 on, the line of development is essentially unbroken."

But the Phoenicians, "the great seafarers of their time," landed in Middle America somewhere around 1,000 B.C., she has concluded. She stressed that this is her personal conclusion from her research—much has to be proved.

But she suggested they were the ones who gave origin to the legend of Quetzalcoatl, the fair-bearded god, among the dark-skinned Mayas, Incas and Aztecs.

Mrs. Irwin speculates that the Phoenicians, Arab trading up and down the African West Coast, might have blown off course and riding Atlantic currents, found Middle America—probably the West Indies.
