Try and Stop Me

—By BENNETT CERF—

ON SAFARI in the African jungle, two explorers were privileged to watch a tribal ritual dance. It was dominated by a near-naked seven-footer, his body painted with every color in the rainbow, wearing a hideous mask, and with horns protruding from his head. As he danced wildly about, uttering terrifying shrieks, an elderly woman in the tribe nudged one of the explorers in the ribs and whispered proudly, "My son, the doctor!"

• • •

"How I first met your mother is not a story for little ears like yours," a father told his son from behind the evening financial tables. "But one thing I can tell you. It sure cured me of whistling."

When the late King George V of England was a schoolboy, he found himself one day embarrassingly short of funds and wrote a heartbreaking letter to his august grandmother, Queen Victoria, beseeching pecuniary assistance. The Queen didn't fall for it. Instead, she wrote him a testy note describing what happened to young whippersnappers who exceeded their allowance. Back came a letter reading, "Dearest Grandmama: I am sure you will be glad to know that I need trouble you no further for money. I sold your last letter to one of the tutors for three pounds."

Meeting Needs of Children Major Parental Concern

By DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist

Much has been written about children being bored because they are not challenged.

Perhaps some school programs are not properly designed to meet the needs of all students. Actually the problem is more involved than just a weak program. The bright student will have little difficulty with the normal work of any program. He could be given advanced work. Although this is a possibility it does not appear to be the answer. There is a great deal of controversy among experts as to the correct answer.

Although parents should be concerned with the overall improvement of the schools, the immediate problem is meeting the needs of their child. The child should not be involved in a parent's objection or dissatisfaction with a teacher or school program.

Based on Attitudes

It is important to recognize that some part of this problem is based upon the attitudes of the parent and child. Children naturally are curious and interested in school activities. Parents can encourage or discourage them.

John is a bright student. He always completes his assignments quickly and accurately. He has a pleasant personality and is looked to as a leader by his peers. There are many activities which interest him such as sports, reading, math club, and writing for the school newspaper. He constantly is involved in a variety of valuable projects.

Bill, a student in John's class, is equally capable. He apparently is unhappy with school. His work is careless and he rarely goes beyond the minimum requirements. There are few activities which interest him. He constantly is complaining about being bored.

What produces these two opposite reactions in the same program? The parents of both boys are interested and participate in school activities. John's parents have encouraged him to pursue his interests. They show concern for his work. When discussing school they indicate confidence in John and his teachers. Bill's parents unintentionally are discouraging him. They are quite critical of the school and teachers. Unfortunately Bill has lost respect and tends to look down on the school program.

Parents must be careful to seperate their criticism of the school and their child's adjustment to the school. Always remember that your child's success is your immediate aim. Help him to get the most from the program. Don't use your child in attempting to improve the system. The improvement of a school system should be kept as a seperate issue.

Good education involves more than direct teaching. The child must be helped to develop his own direction. Self direction is an important asset. After all, there is a point at which formal education ends and the individual must be ready to continue on his own. This approach can answer partially the problem of boredoom because the chil dis challenging himself.

Alumnus Leaves $400,000 to UO

Eugene — An announcement was made at the University of Oregon annual Alumni day luncheon this week end that the late Leon A. Culbertson, a university alumnus and owner of a photographic paper company in New York, left the bulk of his estate, estimated at about $400,000, to the university for scholarship use.

Culbertson was a member of the university class of 1923. The announcement about the bequest was made by another member of the 1923 class, Owen Callaway, a retired New York executive of the W. T. Grant company and executor of the Culbertson estate.

Also present at the luncheon was Culbertson's attorney, John MacGregor, also of New York and a member of the 1923 class.

Responding to Callaway's announcement was University President Arthur S. Flemming, who expressed the university's appreciation for the bequest.

Culbertson died on Feb. 11.

White Not In Kitchen Appliances

New York — (UPI) — It seems that white no longer is the fashion in appliances.

According to National Furniture Review magazine, some manufacturers are selling about 33 per cent of their refigerators and 20 per cent of their ranges, washers and dryers in color. The most popular are yellow and copper.

GLASS CONTAINERS

New York — (UPI) — By 1966, the use of glass containers will have increased by 19 per cent over present levels, according to the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, Inc. Shipments of 204.5 million gross are forecast for 1966, compared with 171.9 million gross at the year end of 1962.

PHONEY MONEY

New York — (UPI) — Watch your money! The Secret Service reports the public lost more than a half million dollars because of counterfeit money in fiscal 1962. The T-men say $20 bills are currently the most frequently counterfeited.
