Foreign Students From Newer Nations

Stanford, Calif. –(UPI)– An ever-growing number of foreign students enrolling in U.S. colleges and universities in the coming years will be from newer nations in the developing areas of the world, according to the National Association of Foreign Student Advisors.

The NAFSA estimated that 100,000 foreign students will be seeking higher education in this country by 1970, with greater numbers of students coming from the emerging nations of Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Middle East.

Key Figure in Allied Breakout Tries To Find Way Into Pentagon

By DICK WEST

Washington –(UPI)– I estimate that the Pentagon has been the target of 5,280 jokes, give or take the one about the lady tourist who rushed up to an assistant secretary and cried: "Show me the way out of here quick! I'm about to have a baby!" "You shouldn't have come in here in your condition," the assistant secretary admonished.

West

"I wasn't in this condition when I came in," she retorted.

The Pentagon, with its maze of rings, floors, corridors and bays, has been the subject of so much jocularity I didn't think it was possible for anyone to compose a new variation on the theme.

But the other day I got a call from a press agent who was plugging a movie called "The Great Escape," based on the mass breakout of Allied prisoners from a German POW camp during World War II.

He had with him C. Wallace Floody of Toronto, a former pilot with the Royal Canadian Air Force who had been a key figure in the breakout and who served as technical adviser for the film.

"I've got a great idea," the publicist told me. "Floody is supposed to be an expert in this field, so let's see if he can find his way out of the Pentagon."

"It won't sell," I replied. "It's been overdone. There are 5,280 jokes about people trying to find their way out of the Pentagon. Did you hear the one about the lady tourist who . . ."

A few minutes later the press agent called me back.

"Okay," he said, "if it's no good having him try to find his way out of the Pentagon, how about seeing if he can find his way in?"

"Max, baby, you're a genius," I said. "A man with your brains ought to be running the studio. Or better yet, running the Pentagon."

In less time than it takes a cab driver to locate the "river entrance" – he finally let us out at the "mall entrance" – we were standing before the Pentagon waiting for Floody to lead us in.

Actually, it isn't too difficult to find your way into the Pentagon. All you have to do is follow the signs. The first sign we followed was marked "To Bays."

When we returned from Chesapeake Bay, we went back to the Pentagon and started over.

Another sign read "Stairs–Down Only." Presumably it is for the use of Pentagon officials who have been kicked upstairs.

Finally, we came to a corridor in which was posted a diagram of the Pentagon interior. It had a red arrow pointing to a spot that was labeled "You Are Here."

About five minutes later we saw another diagram that was identical except that the label on the arrow said "What Are You Doing Back Here Again?"

As we were leaving the building, by way of Manila Bay, a funny thing happened. A lady tourist rushed up to us and cried: "Get me out of here quick! I'm about to have a baby!"

Nation's Capital Is Hub of Tall Buildings

Washington –(UPI)– "The average visitor to Washington may think of this city only in terms of its public buildings. But, if so, he will miss much that is here, for the nation's capital is also a great religious center."

Those are the introductory words of a newly published "Guide to Religious Shrines in the Nation's Capital."

The handsomely illustrated paperback was written by Glen D. Everett, veteran Washington correspondent of Religious News service. Complete with maps and suggested routes, it takes the reader on a tour of some of the greatest religious edifices of the modern world, such as Washington cathedral and the National shrine of the Immaculate Conception, as well as many lesser known points of religious interest, such as a functioning Franciscan monastery, a beautiful Moslem mosque which faces Mecca, the prayer room of the U.S. Capitol, and the churches in which George Washington and Abraham Lincoln worshipped.

Everett hopes that his unique guide book will promote greater interest in Washington's religious shrines among the seven million tourists who pour through the capital city each year. He feels that visitors who see the great churches and synagogues standing side by side with public buildings will appreciate, better than ever before, the role that religion has played in America's heritage.

"Without faith in God, America could not have been built," Everett says in the introduction to the guide book. "Without it, our nation cannot be preserved."

Fish and Game Group Protests New Game Laws

Ranchers in the Lakeview area have started posting the 500,000 acres of land they warned they would post if game laws were not changed for 1963, Walter Craig, president of the Oregon Fish and Game council, Jackson County chapter, reported here on his return from the eastern Oregon area.

Craig, also, reported two communications sent out by the Jackson County chapter, protesting the game management. One was addressed to Gov. Mark O. Hatfield and the other to Roland Bowles, Oregon State Game commission.

The letter to the governor states that the council is not "happy with the results achieved from the legislature and not satisfied with the ridiculous game laws for 1963." Much of the complaint is directed to the issuance of doe permits this season.

"The Game Commission is issuing, state-wide, 97,350 unit doe permits this seasor," the letter to Governor Hatfield continues, "From our canvassing of the state, both eastern and western, the deer populations within our four boundaries do not warrant the killing of 97,350 does."

In the letter to Bowles, the Jackson County chapter complains that "since the Green Springs are was split into the Rogue unit and Keno unit, more doe permits will be issued for the Rogue unit than were issued for the entire Green Springs unit last year."

The Jackson county chapter also protests the authorization of the killing of spike deer in eastern Oregon in the same letter to Bowles and asks that the game commissioners reconsider the game laws.

"Based on personal interviews," the letter to Bowles relates, "it is the concensus of the majority of the people in this area that the deer are definitely diminishing and opening another doe season will certainly do nothing to help this problem."

New York –(UPI)– A total of 3,963 Saudi Arab employees of Arabian American Oil company have bought new homes under Aramco's home ownership plan. The Saudi government contributed 1,910 lots free.
