

Youth at Work

Each summer hundreds of young men and women, finished with school for the year and anxious to be self-sufficient, seek some kind of employment.

Business firms and individual home owners can be helpful in putting our "youth power" to work, but the problem lies in getting employer and employee together. Again this year the Mail Tribune is offering free classified advertisements to youngsters seeking work or selling items for which they have no further use.

A new organization, Youth Incorporated, located at 7 North Bartlett st., also is helping students find employment. The value of putting young people into gainful employment is obvious, both economically and from the standpoint of building character and responsibility.

Again this year the Mail Tribune assisted young people in the valley obtain work or sell items by offering free action-ad-grams in the Medford Mail Tribune through June 13. Many of the young advertisers had replies to their ads. Ruth Buckholtz, a student at Crater High school, will wash windows, do housework or work in a store to earn extra money this summer.

Connie, Bill and Bob Gamache, 204 Berrydale ave., work as a team doing house and yard work and odd jobs. They say they are "experienced workers," having done this type of work before.

David Wooten, 14, of 915 Kenyon ave., sold his cornet through his classified ad in the Mail Tribune and was able to purchase a better one by adding money from his paper route. He is a member of McLoughlin Junior High school band.

The Mail Tribune received a thank you note from Susan Ross, 473 Head rd., Central Point, for helping her sell her bicycle. With the money she bought a bathing suit and paid for a window she had broken.

Tom Hampson, 911 Dakota ave., hopes to earn all of his spending money this summer by making photographic prints. Tom, 15, is a student at Medford High school.

Dick Breeden, a senior at Medford High school, advertised through the Mail Tribune for yard and cleanup work and soon had several jobs. Dick, who lives at 2640 Table Rock rd., also does painting and window washing.
