

Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor, and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mrs. T. A.—My husband wants me to return to him but I don't love him. Mae W.—If my mother goes back to that creature, she can forget about me.

Mrs. T. A.—The only emotion I feel for my husband is pity because he has cancer of the throat. He is my second husband and has never shown me or my children any kindness-in fact, he was jailed for molesting my teen-age daughters. My children were placed with their father's relatives. He was released from prison and came back to live with me. But he drank and abused me, so I left him in my apartment. I pay the rent but I've moved in with Mae.

Mae W.—Mother must choose between that leech and her children. For ten years he's been bleeding her, never supported us, upset me until the court stepped in. When I was 18 I studied nursing, and I have a good job in a hospital now. Mother has a steady income too from office-cleaning contracts. We can have a respectable peaceful life, and even take in my sisters when they are of age. But she must drop that man completely.

The Council: Mae is right. The only explanation for Mrs. A's "pull" in the direction of her husband (after much "commuting" between living alone and living with him, which we omitted from her condensed words above) is that she likes to suffer! If so, she has no right to drag in Mae and the other children to suffer too. The cancer is a separate matter; perhaps the medical attention he gets for that condition can be extended to his alcoholism and his psychoneurotic behavior. Mrs. A. can remain interested in his health problems, but her own health hinges on straightening out her own course. She can't straddle between loyalty to her children and "mothering" this 100 per cent leech. Which shall it be, Mrs. A? Our advice is that you stay with Mae. There seems little hope that your husband will ever act like one. Husbands protect wives.

Former Resident Retires from Post

Miss M. Ethel Wilkinson, secretary to Superintendent of Lassen Volcanic National park, has retired after more than 33 years of government service, the last 10 of which were spent at Lassen Volcanic Headquarters, Mineral, Calif. She was presented with the department of the interior meritorious service award and a lifetime pass to all interior department areas in the country. The award is reserved for presentation only to those persons deserving the honor after a review by department officials, according to Sylvester.

Miss Wilkinson's record of career service to the national park service commenced at Crater Lake National park in Oregon in 1928. In 1947 she transferred to the national park regional office in San Francisco, remaining there until her selection as superintendent's secretary at Lassen Volcanic in 1952.

The presentation was made at a housewarming held at her recently completed new home. An oil painting was given to her by her former fellow employees and friends. Her new address is 6102 Maxwell dr., Paradise, Calif.

Two Men Wanted in Medford Arrested

Medford police detectives have been notified that two men wanted here on bad check charges have been apprehended, one in Portland and the other in San Francisco.

Being held by Portland authorities is Jack Vernon Brooks Whitney, 25. He was arrested on a district court warrant charging him with obtaining property under false pretenses. Sheriff's deputies expect to return Whitney to Medford later this week to face the charge.

San Francisco authorities are holding William S. Penrose, 28, on a district court warrant, also charging him with obtaining property under false pretenses. Penrose is accused of writing several bad checks in the Medford area last January.

Articulate People 'Talk Up' Medford, McNeil Tells Group

Don McNeil, manager of the Medford Chamber of Commerce, discussed his "favorite subject - Medford and the Rogue valley" at the Monday luncheon of the Medford Chamber of Commerce Roundtable.

McNeil's general thesis was that there is something "special" about Medford which causes those who have had some association with it to become "Texas-style ambassadors" for it wherever they go in the world.

The speaker titled his talk, "Medford? Where's That?" The point he wished to establish was that the question is not often asked about Medford, since it seems unusually well known for a community its size.

"Medford is perhaps better known than those of us who live here think it is," he said. McNeil said there are at least four categories of persons who "spread the faith" about the city. They include "highly intelligent youngsters who leave Medford to seek jobs elsewhere," former residents, visitors and local residents who travel.

Articulate People 'Talk Up' Medford, McNeil Tells Group

"All these are articulate people," McNeil said, "who apparently 'talk up' Medford in glowing terms."

To illustrate his point, the chamber manager quoted excerpts from a number of letters he has received in his office during the last two months.

From Instructor
One came from a speech instructor at the University of Washington, who wrote to McNeil to tell him of a student of his from Medford, Diane Lewis, whom he described as a "splendid spokesman" for this area.

Another letter was from a soldier stationed in Germany, whose "bunkmate" was from Medford. The GI said his friend had told him so much about this area, he wanted some literature to see if he had been told the truth.

Another came from a family in Virginia. The writer said they planned to move to Medford in the near future on the strength of what they had been told about the Rogue valley by a friend who was a former resident.

Another inquiry received by the chamber office was from a family in Arkansas, which sought information about Medford because they had "heard so many good comments" about it.

Other letters have been received recently from persons in Mississippi, California and Texas, among other places.

One teacher from Nebraska wrote he was "sold on Medford" without ever having seen it "because of some of the things he had heard."

A California resident wrote that he had developed car trouble during a recent vacation and while several other garages on his trip had "charged him for parts he didn't need," J. R. Whitney Olds garage had "fixed the trouble in 10 minutes."

A correspondent from Stuttgart, Germany, wrote that the "Chamber of Commerce and the newspaper in Medford have really put the city on the map. An Air Force officer, formerly stationed at Kingsley Field in Klamath Falls, and now based in France, mailed a wrapper from a Medford pear he had been served in Europe to the chamber office. The officer said he still had fond memories of this area.

McNeil said he continually gets letters from former servicemen who had been stationed at Camp White during World War II.

"Those men have never stopped talking about Medford," McNeil said, "and they're still selling this area."

The chamber manager said he thought there were several reasons for this unusual situation. He said Medfordites have a great deal of pride in their schools, and their reputation for excellence is well known. He said there is a "competitive spirit" in this community that causes the people here to "need to be the best city in Oregon, and not just the fourth largest."

Medford residents, McNeil said, like "to do things themselves," whether it is building hospitals, developing parks or off-street parking lots, or founding a Shakespearean festival.

"Independent Thinkers"
The people here are "independent thinkers" too, he said. He referred to the movement begun several years ago to found the state of Jefferson out of northern California and southern Oregon. "You might even call us 'rebels' in a sense," he said.

Medford also is noted for its "firsts," McNeil said. He listed as Medford innovations the formation of Mercy Flights Inc.; the Southern Oregon Tree Farm association's radio net system; the practice of cloud seeding; the development of Park and Shop; the Medford Plan, which developed into the Medford Crusade; the two-county program for highway development; gift fruit packing; and a variety of other accomplishments.

As optimistic as the situation is, McNeil urged the audience to do whatever it could to enhance Medford's regional and national reputation.

He called upon area residents to become personal ambassadors whenever possible. "Write letters to your friends, and talk up Medford and its attractions and advantages every chance you get," he said.

Salem—UPI—The State Tax commission has filed a $488.05 attachment on the salary of State Sen. Thomas Mahoney (D-Portland).

The claim is for the balance of back state taxes which the commission claims are due from Mahoney.

The Auditor's department of the Secretary of State office, which handles legislators' pay, said $116.66, less state and federal withholding taxes, was due Mahoney the day the claim was filed.

It is the commission's intention to continue to take the back taxes from Mahoney's pay check, it will have to file additional claims, the auditor said.

Lawmakers receive $250 a month.
