

Highway Inn Is Booming Occupation

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER United Press International New York—Innkeeping along the nation's highways rapidly is becoming a most fascinating occupation because operators never know what nightfall may bring.

There was a time when the motel owner was little more than a roadside room clerk but now he has become a combination of zoo keeper, marriage counselor and troubleshooter.

This and other unexpected incidents were recalled by John Lacock, President of Quality Courts United, Inc., a non-profit association.

The operator of the South-ernaire at Ft. Pierce, Fla., reported a woman complained because the stamp machine gave her only two-four cent stamps for a dime.

"It wasn't until the operator gave her two cents in change that she calmed down," Lacock said. "At the same motel, one woman insisted on a baby crib for her dog. By diplomacy, though, this problem was solved."

Lacock mentioned an instance wherein a woman and her three children arrived late one night with their dog, a boxer.

"They had no money but were willing to swap the dog for a room for the night," Lacock said. "The motel operator didn't take the dog, but did give them complimentary accommodations for the night."

Breakup Spat "Another operator had the strange experience of having a lady rent connecting rooms, one for herself and the other for her pet puma."

An innkeeper's wife helped break up a honeymooners' spat at the Bradenton Cabana in Bradenton, Fla.

Lacock said a bride came crying to the front desk of this motel and told of an argument with her husband. The innkeeper's wife offered her solace and haven, but a few minutes later the bridegroom showed up. The innkeeper's wife eventually talked the couple into patching up the quarrel.

There is a bit of whimsy in an incident reported by Bill Guilford of the Colonial Motor Court in Burlington, Vt. He watched a deer jump through a double-glassed window, fall on a bed and jump back out the window.

The deer vanished into the forest after looking into each window of the motel. Guilford said.

Space Age Method Being Pioneered For Industry

By LAWRENCE R. WERNER United Press International Pittsburgh—While science is reaching for the moon, a Pittsburgh management advisor is pioneering a programmed instruction method he believes will be the foundation for industrial efficiency in the space age.

Dr. H. B. Maynard says his programmed instruction in Methods - Time Measurement (MTM), initiated two months ago at the Maynard Research Council in suburban Wilkesburg, already is justifying the costly changeover from the conventional methods previously used in the MTM course.

MTM, explains Maynard, "applies predetermined time standards to all the basic motions involved in physical work."

When Maynard set up his first course in MTM in 1948, he utilized ordinary educational techniques, lectures, quizzes, visual aids and the like.

But, the programmed instruction system is a radical departure in that the student "learns by doing."

Teaching Machines "Teaching machines are the backbone of the course," said Maynard.

Each student or trainee occupies a partitioned, air conditioned cubicle where he works on the programmed instruction material. The teaching machines present new material to the student who responds by writing answers corrected by the machine, enabling the trainee to learn at his own pace.

Besides the teaching machines, Maynard's programmed instruction method includes movies and kinscopes, lab work and experimentation. Also, a trained counselor is available for consultation at any time.

Maynard, who also heads H. B. Maynard and company, a management consulting firm, says MTM procedures have resulted in savings of millions of dollars to some firms and reduced some ailing organizations from the brink of bankruptcy.

Large firms such as Westinghouse Electric corporation, General Motors and U.S. Steel corporation as well as smaller companies send personnel to the Maynard Research Council to learn the methods for improving methods and measuring work.

Comparing programmed instruction with conventional methods, Maynard said: "Irregular Schedules. 'Now time study men, industrial and methods engineers and others can take the course at any time on regular or irregular schedules. There is a constant high level of instruction independent of the ability of any classroom instructor."

Length of the course is approximately 100 hours and the school can accommodate from 50 to 75 students at any given time. The fee is $445 per student.

Graduates of the Maynard Research Council return to their firms armed with practical tools for "measuring and simplifying work, setting time standards and establishing pay rates for work," says Maynard.

"We recommend that two union men from any firm take the course at the same time as management personnel," he explained. "We feel that MTM provides the basis for a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. It has held up time and again in arbitration."
