Diamonds Have 'Fingerprints', Expert Claims

Chicago - UPI - Diamonds are as different as fingerprints, according to a gem expert who announced a new method of identifying them.

Leon R. Bellis, a diamond appraiser, said "fingerprinting of diamonds could spell the end of an era which has seen diamonds become the most sought-after loot, partly because of the impossibility of identifying a diamond removed from its original setting."

Police departments "are holding thousands of dollars worth of unclaimed diamonds," said Bellis. Though the thieves are caught and the diamonds recovered, there is no way of returning the gems to their owners because of lack of identity.

Bellis said the services of his organization, Central File and Identification Bureau, incorporated, will free for all law enforcement authorities. Each diamond "has markings discernible only under 100-power magnification," Bellis said. These "invisible" markings - technically called inclusions - are not faults but are part of the very structure of the stones, said Bellis. "They are never exactly the same on any two diamonds," he said, "and they are permanent, no matter what a thief does to change the looks of a diamond."

Bellis said the identification system would enable jewelers to register any diamond of one-third carat or over and thus aid in the recovery of lost or stolen gems.

Fire Prevention Regulations Noted

Fire prevention regulations for the Rogue River National forest, as proclaimed by Gov. Mark O. Hatfield, were announced locally today by Robert H. Torheim, fire staff officer. They become effective July 1. The two requirements, specified by state law, restrict smoking while traveling in timber, brush and grass areas except in vehicles on roads; and list the tools to be carried by campers. Camping regulations apply only to people traveling by auto or with pack animals and staying in camps outside the forest service improved campgrounds, Torheim explained. These forest travelers are to carry one ax, not less than 26 inches long with head weighing two pounds or more; one shovel, not less than 36 inches long with blade not less than eight inches wide; and a water container with a minimum capacity of one gallon, he said.

They will be accompanied to Japan by coaches John Dustin, Marshfield, and De Lance Duncan, Klamath Falls. The contingent includes seven present and past state prep champions and six winners of the high school division of an AAU freestyle wrestling tourney at Corvallis in March.

Trimble shot the first hole-in-one on the 170-yard eighth hole on an Augusta County course Wednesday and clicked for the second one on the 173-yard final hole.

Deer Hunters Requested To Make Careful Check

Portland - If you're a deer hunter, the game commission reminds that you should check carefully how you want to use your unit permit application this year.

According to the regulations for 1963, no hunter will be permitted to take more than one deer during this year's seasons. This makes a choice necessary.

There are no controlled hunts scheduled for this fall; however, there are a number of extended seasons. Three of these extended seasons are early deer seasons and here's where the use of the unit permit comes into play. If a hunter wants to participate in the High Cascade buck season, the Waldport-Mapleton buck deer season or the Minam Pack deer season, he must use his unit permit application, received with his deer tag, to apply. In the case of the High Cascade and Waldport-Mapleton hunts, the hunter will be able to use his permit only during these seasons. In the Minam hunt, the permit will be good for the early hunt and then the regular antlerless season in the Minam unit during the regular season.

21 Lambs In Count of Bighorns

Portland - Almost one lamb to each bighorn ewe is the report from this year's bighorn sheep counters according to the Oregon game commission. Dave Luman, chief big game biologist for the commission, and four other commission personnel made the annual count on June 20. After traversing the 1,000-acre pen on Hart mountain and the adjacent rimrocks, the hikers tallied a total of 33 sheep, inside the pen were 12 adults and seven lambs, while outside were four adult rams, 18 ewes and 14 lambs. "Excellent" was Luman's appraisal of the lamb crops, pointing out that the 21 lambs for 28 ewes was almost more than could be expected. The counting crew also found one lamb that had died from an internal birth defect.

Since the reintroduction of 20 bighorns into Oregon from British Columbia in November of 1954, the herd has steadily increased. Last year 48 animals were observed on the Hart mountain count, and at least 11 animals have been seen in the Steens mountains where releases were made from the Hart mountain herd in 1960 and 1961.

Though the tally this year revealed 53 animals, Luman said that the lack of rams in the county and the difficulties of complete observation in the area make the probability of animals left uncounted quite high. Tentative plans are now under way to trap some of the animals and move them to the Steens mountains to strengthen the herd that has been started there. No complete tally has been made of the Steens herd, but such a count may be attempted later this year.

Jets, Raiders AFL Concern

Buffalo, N. Y. - UPI - The drive to revive the New York Jets and Oakland Raiders was the major concern of the American Football league executive committee today. The controversial question of cutting rights confronted league owners as they moved into the second and final day of a summer meeting. The problem facing the league was whether to pass a resolution giving the Jets and Raiders first chance at all players released by American, National and Canadian league teams. Coaches and general managers will meet Friday. The first half of the league's equalization draft in May was something less than productive. The Jets selected only two players from a list of eligible players, and the Raiders picked just one.
