Election May Be Held on District In Prospect Area

An election on formation of the proposed Prospect Rural Fire Protection district will be held probably in August in the Prospect community hall, the Jackson county court said Friday following the public hearing on forming such a district.

Arrangements must be made with the county clerk and the elections department, County Judge Earl M. Miller said. Only two people appeared at the hearing and no opposition to the district formation was voiced.

Thomas Moore, acting fire chief, said the main purpose of the new fire district will be to get an organized volunteer fire department. Now, anybody who happens to be nearby goes to the fire with the truck, he explained.

Salem — New street maps for four Oregon cities are now available through the Oregon state highway department, according to Forrest Cooper, state highway engineer.

Weather Has Not Hurt Fruit Crop

The current cool weather and rains have not seriously hurt the pear, peach and apple crops in the Rogue valley, but the vegetable crops are about two weeks behind, County Agent Don Berry said Saturday.

Considerable scab has been noted in local apple orchards, but if sprayed soon should not produce serious harm, it was explained.

Caneberries "are not too good" because of the cool, wet weather, Berry said. Valley production may be light.

Cool nights have stopped tomatoes from setting. Temperatures of 65 degrees or more are required, he explained. Tomato plants in blossom have not been pollinated because of the weather.

Growers were delayed in getting cantaloupes into the ground due to a wet spring, and now cool weather has delayed their growth.

There will be approximately a half crop of peaches, but cool weather will not hurt them, Berry said.

"We will probably have the largest size peaches that have grown in the valley for a number of years. They are already unusually large for this time of year. The peach crops is expected to be ready for picking in August," the county agent said.

Importance of Legal Aspects Of Separation Are Reviewed

The importance of maintaining the legal aspects of the separation of church and state was stressed Friday night by Glenn Archer, Washington, D.C., executive director of Protestants and Other Americans United for the Separation of Church and State, in a talk here.

Speaking to a crowd of more than 250 persons in the National Guard Armory, Archer reviewed the history of the group organized in 1947 and some of the cases in which it has been active in its fight to guarantee religious liberty to the people and churches in the United States.

Archer, a former farmer, teacher and dean of a college law school, stressed that any church which cannot live on its own financial resources.

Loses Main Purpose
"Religion loses its main purpose when it is attached to the state," the speaker continued. As a tool of the state the people lose respect and obedience for it, Archer said.

"In countries where there are state churches, members of other faiths are second class citizens," the lawyer commented, mentioning England, several European countries, and several in South America.

The speaker noted that only one church in the United States has publicly stated that it has a program to obtain public tax money for support of its programs.

Put on Public Payroll
"The way to kill a church is to put it on the public payroll," he noted. The speaker explained that POAU is not hostile to any religion and does not place any church in a preferential position. He stressed the importance of equal rights for all — Christian, Jew, and atheist.

"Our controversy is with those lawmakers and law administrators who would yield to the demand of any church for a relation to the state which the Constitution forbids," Archer continued.

He noted that about 200 legal actions undertaken by POAU have saved the American public more than $80 million plus unknown millions saved through campaigns and action which prevented approval of legislation that would invade the meaning of the First Amendment.

One example cited concerned the gift of 160 acres of land by the City of St. Petersburg, Fla., to the Presbyterian church seminary. Through the efforts of POAU the land was appraised and the church paid $500,000 for the property.

He noted that in the resulting drive for funds by the college, the residents contributed $600,000. Another case in which POAU was active concerned the Christian Brothers Winery in California in which the Internal Revenue Service collected nearly $4 million in back taxes.

Citing a case in Oregon, Archer explained that POAU was active last year in the court action regarding free textbooks to parochial schools. He stressed that requests for tax money for parochial schools is the big issue in the separation of church and state question today.

Archer's appearance was sponsored by a group interested in establishing a branch of the national organization here. A temporary committee has been functioning under the chairmanship of V. L. Armstrong, 714 Park ave., Medford.

The speaker was introduced by the Rev. Bernard Andrews, minister of First Baptist church, who was master of ceremonies. Maynard Hadley directed the singing and Raymond Lewis was organist.

Negroes Schedule Rally in Savannah
By United Press International
Negroes have scheduled a mass rally in Savannah, Ga., tonight to decide whether to resume demonstrations in that racial trouble-spot.

Further demonstrations were called off Monday pending the outcome of negotiations between white and Negro leaders. But demonstration leader Hosea Williams threatened Thursday to resume mass protests unless six Negro demonstrators were released from jail.

City officials have flatly refused to free the Negroes, who include Williams' top aide, 19-year-old Ben Clark. Authorities said the group was being held without bond as habitual lawbreakers.

At Cambridge, Md., another continuing hotspot, Negroes vowed to demonstrate continuously "if and when the National Guard is withdrawn." The Guard was sent to Cambridge several weeks ago to stamp out racial violence. Negotiations to solve the city's racial problems apparently are stalemated.
