4-H NEWS

Merry Mulchers

At the last meeting of the Merry Mulchers 4-H Garden club we discussed and selected a date for a swimming party.

Mrs. Pielaet reported on the results of our car wash. Roger Pielaet presented two bills to the club. One was for a poster and the other was for flowers for the city hall in Central Point.

Our club attended the Central Point community prefair in which several of our members won awards.

Winning blue ribbons were Perry Pielaet, Patty Baker and Serena Whitehead. Red ribbons went to Billy Walters, DeAnn Troutman, Martha Van Middlesworth, Cindy Barber and Roger Pielaet. David and Mike Smith won white ribbons for garden vegetables.

Perry Pielaet, Linda Gheysen and DeAnn Troutman won blue, red and white awards, respectively, in flower arranging.

Buzzen Duzzen

On Wednesday, June 26, the Buzzen Duzzen 4-H club modeled at the Wimer Garden club in the Wimer Grange.

We modeled the skirts that we will exhibit this year at the fair. Tea was also served by the club and the two other 4-H clubs.

We have had three meetings this month held at the homes of Cheryl Martin, Cynthis Moore and Sharon Sletten. We are now making plans for a swimming party and picnic which will be held in the early part of July.

Columbia Lightship In Astoria Exhibit

Astoria–(UPI)–The old lightship Columbia No. 88 arrived here Monday to become the major exhibit of the Columbia River Maritime Museum.

The 55-year-old ship was purchased for $21,000 that was donated by local citizens. A crew of 20, mostly Astoria residents, sailed the vessel here from Seattle. It was under command of Capt. Kenneth McAphin of the Columbia River Bar Pilots Association.

Public Confused by Descriptive Term For Mental Health

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor

New York –(UPI)– Social scientists greatly need a truly descriptive term for mental health now that most of them describe mental illness as mental health. This confuses both scientists and the public, said Prof. Andie L. Knutson of the University of California, Berkeley, in calling for a new scientific effort to find out precisely what mental health is. Social sciences have yet to define it in terms acceptable to all scientists.

Delos Smith

"The term 'mental health' is rapidly replacing 'mental illness' in lay and professional vocabularies," he said. "We include among the mental health professions those concerned with mental disorders, and refer to resources available to those with mental or emotional problems as mental health clinics or mental health facilities.

"One sees reference to 'the problems of mental health' and even to 'the prevention of mental health' by outstanding experts who get their words jumbled. Many of us have difficulty avoiding such slips."

No Satisfactory Term

There is now no truly satisfactory term with which to describe the absence of illness or the goal of good health, said Dr. Knutson.

"The phrase, 'positive mental health' which was initially used to refer to the development of creativity and self-actualization, is now being employed as a synonym for mental health," he continued.

But it also is used to mean prevention of mental illness and to cover techniques to cut down on the number of people with mental disorders.

"The public implications of this switch in technical jargon are most interesting. It would be folly, for example, to assume that mental health clinics serve, or can effectively serve as primary public resources for persons who seek assistance in developing their creative potentialities."

The social sciences need both a descriptive term of the goal of such persons and the knowledge with which to help them to reach the goal, he said in appealing through a technical organ of the American Psychological association for large-scale research.

"Many people want and seek counseling, evaluation or guidance for themselves or their children not because they are concerned with illness or potential illness, but because they wish to enjoy a more abundant life," he said.

Bound by Old Terms

Psychologists and other social scientists are bound in their creative research by the old terms, such as "positive mental health," and a new term would liberate them for an imaginative search for ways of advancing human creativity and self-realization.

The new term for mental health should "at once retain the good will and enthusiastic participation of members of the mental health profession and their medical, health and welfare colleagues, and yet effectively elicit the involvement of members of other social sciences, the humanities, education, religion and philosophy."

He confessed that his "own level of creativity" was not high enough for the task. He reminded that a truly descriptive term had been invented eight years ago but failed to attract any professional acceptance. The term is, "interpersonal competence." Clearly psychologists will have to improve on that, he said.

Three Arraigned On Indictments

Among the persons arraigned in circuit court Monday on grand jury indictments was Bernard Croghan, 107 East Second st., Medford, on a charge of first degree arson. Croghan is accused of setting a fire in his room.

Jack Allen, 31, Brewster, Wash., charged with burglary not in a dwelling also appeared.

Herbert Prosser, 421 West 10th st., Medford, was arraigned on charges of burglary not in a dwelling.

All three had their cases continued until Wednesday.

Grange News

Central Point Grange

Overseer Dee Hendrickson presided at the recent meeting of Central Point Grange.

Standing committee chairman reporting were Arnold Bohnert and Delmar Smith agriculture, Edwin Gebhard, horticulture, and Benton Boyce, egislative. Mrs. Alma Mallory gave the home economics club report for Mrs. Morris Frink.

Members are reminded that the July 5 regular meeting has been cancelled. They are to phone Mrs. Frink and report their Grange sales slips to her by July 8.

During the meeting members discussed the fire hazard of dry weeds around buildings and on vacant lots.

Serving committee for the evening were Mrs. Effie Caster and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Caster.

Deliverance Day

Top Corporations To Be Returned To Owners on July 9 at 7:12 p.m.

By DICK WEST

Washington – (UPI) – Some clock watcher at the U. S. Chamber of Commerce did a little figuring the other day and came up with a timely calculation. He ascertained that precisely at 7:12 p.m. on July 9 the 1963 calendar year will be 52 per cent over. Putting it another way, only 48 per cent of the year will be left.

West

By a stunning coincidence, 52 per cent also happens to be the tax rate on corporation income. Therefore, Edwin P. Neilan, president of the chamber, has proposed that July 9 be designated as "Deliverance Day."

At that time, statistically at least, "the federal government moves out of the top taxpaying corporations and turns them back to the owners for the rest of the year," the chamber noted.

Neilan recommended that "Deliverance Day" be suitably celebrated by the nation's businessmen, but he neglected to suggest ways that this might be done.

This being the outdoor season, I should think that a cook-out would be appropriate. Perhaps business leaders could get together and lure Mortimer Caplin, the revenue commissioner.

Or they could run Chairman Wilbur Mills of the House Ways and Means committee up a flag-pole and fire a 21-gun salute.

Regardless of what mode of celebration is chosen, it seems to me that "Deliverance Day," if it is to become a tradition, calls for an exchange of gifts among those emanicipated.

In this connection, I happen to have at hand the latest catalog published by a company that manufactures a line of toys for executives. Some of them would make ideal gifts for the occasion.

For example, almost any liberated tycoon would appreciate receiving an "executive decision-maker" to help him form snap judgments.

Confronted with a problem, he can arrive at a solution simply by flicking an arrow that spins around a board and finally stops on a square marked "sell out quick," or "go golfing," or "lie about it" or some other logical decision.

Another item that caught my eyes is an "executive jigger" that shows the proper amount of liquor to pour for special occasions. Recommended dosages in clude 1¾ ounces upon being promoted to vice president, 1½ ounces upon being awarded a key to the executive washroom and 2/3 of an ounce to get up courage to ask for a raise. The jigger does not specify what amount to pour for a toast to "Deliverance Day," but there is a related entry. It prescribes 1¼ ounces when tax agents are checking the books.

by just 5,200 employees in Jackson County with families, using only one quart per day. The actual consumption is probably much higher because few families with growing children use only one quart of milk daily.
