Companies Making Effort To Eliminate 'Weasel Wording'

By LEON DANIEL

Cape Canaveral — (UPI) — A couple of companies instrumental in the success of the Minuteman missile are making a determined effort to close the space industry's "gobbledegook gap."

The war on this game of verbal hide-and-seek, sometimes called "weasel wording," is being waged by the Boeing Company and Space Technology Laboratories.

According to Kenneth L. Calkins of the Boeing public relations department, this type of writing "often clothes itself in a protective sheath of jargon and can be identified by its artful way of saying nothing."

Calkins' crusade is aimed at the people within the industry—industrial writers and other employees whose job it is to write letters, memos and reports dealing with the extremely complicated business of making missiles.

Here is an example of the kind of writing Calkins hopes to eliminate: "Man-machine requirements in this system environment impose severe visual acuity problems."

Can't See Panel

This translates "he can't see the instrument panel."

Calkins said that about a year ago STL project manager Ivar M. Holliday looked over some Boeing and STL reports and correspondence on the Minuteman program and—although he is quite familiar with the missile—he couldn't decipher some of them.

Holliday decided that what was needed was some quality control of the hundreds of pages written about the Minuteman.

Partially as a result of Calkins' and Holliday's efforts, Boeing and STL employees have attended classes aimed at lifting the fog from their writing.

Calkins believes that unexplained, unfamiliar abbreviations have no place in a field that already is highly complex. In a top story in an Air Force command newspaper he counted 60 unexplained abbreviations.

Typical Air Force writing leans heavily to the use of unexplained abbreviations, but Calkins said Air Force manual 10-4 reads, "the space saved by using abbreviations does not begin to compensate for the loss of clarity that may result.

Need An Aid

Calkins said he knows of one Boeing employee who collected source material to help cope with the abbreviation problem, including a sheet entitled "AF (Air Force) abbreviations used on the Bomarc program."

"It is the kind of non-writing that pushes the cost of correspondence up to $20 a memo," Calkins said.

He keeps battling away at the use of four-bit words and "circumlocution," which he defines as "saying nothing in 25 additional words or more."

One of the ways he does this is to ask Boeing employees if they ever heard of William Gibbs. Usually they haven't. Gibbs laid the foundation of physical chemistry that led to the present development of the plastics, rubber and steel industries.

Gibbs set down his ideas in a paper called "On The Equilibrium of Heterogeneous Substances." It was almost easier to rediscover the principles of physical chemistry than it was to read the paper.

Calkins said Gibbs came within a whisker of keeping all that knowledge to himself.

Advance Group to Leave for Training

The advance unit of the second battalion, 414th regiment (BCT) will leave Medford by air Friday for Camp Roberts, Calif., according to Lt. Col. John F. Rush, Medford, commander.

Area men comprising the advance unit are Maj. Donald E. Gray, Medford, H-H Company, officer in charge; S.Sgt. Richard J. Swinney, Medford; Specialist Four Gary W. Smith, Jacksonville; Specialist Four Gary R. Waller, and Pfc. Melvin D. Graham, Grants Pass, all Company E.; First Lt. Peter D. Schmitz, Medford, S.Sgt. Adolph C. Larson Jr., Shady Cove, and Specialist Four Rex Bounds, Ashland, Company F.; Capt. Vernon E. Craft., Sgt. Antonio J. Arana and Pfc. Michael L. Clark, Medford, Specialist Four John A. Corbell, Grants Pass, Company G.

First Lt. Daniel F. Hitcock, Specialist Four Clifford L. Ambers and Specialist Four Boyd W. Casper, Klamath Falls, Company H, will join the advance unit in Medford.

The term "astronaut" is of Greek origin, reports the Encyclopedia Americana. The literal translation of the word is "star sailor."
