

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

AN IMPATIENT angler had tried four varieties of bait without a single bite. Finally, in disgust, he drew in his reel, and threw a handful of coins into the stream. "Okay," he hollered. "Go and buy something you do like!"

The tools invented by the eye-men, asserts Arthur Clarke, in his book "Profiles of the Future," caused them to evolve into their successor, Homo sapiens. "The tools that WE have invented, however," he continues, "will BE our successor. To put it bluntly and brutally, the machine is going to take over."

QUOTES:
"As he knew not what to say, he swore."—Byron.
"Lawyers, I suppose, were children once."—Charles Lamb.
"The louder he talked of his honor, the faster we counted our spoons."—Emerson.
"I am not afraid of tomorrow, for I have seen yesterday, and I love today."—William Allen White.
"Do not do unto others as you would that they should do unto you. Their tastes might not be the same."—Bernard Shaw.

Father's Interest In Child's Growth Declared Important

By DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist

Much advice concerned with helping children is aimed at the mother, but the father's interest and participation in a child's growth is particularly important.

A father's involvement in child rearing most often is affected by his occupation. His working hours, need for travel and type of position are all factors controlling his availability. These situations should not relieve him of responsibility or limit the value of his participation.

It is difficult sometimes for a father to come home after a busy day and exhibit a pleasant, relaxed attitude toward an active child. It is important that it be done. A plan probably can be arranged so that father can rest a short while and then spend some time with his child. Surely week ends should include activities with the youngster.

Problems Vary
These types of problems are individual and naturally vary with different families. The difficulties must be worked out using good judgement and the understanding that a family needs a father.

Let's take a look at the actual role of a father. He is traditionally the head of the household. His approach can be democratic. A balanced approach using discussion and explanations, and firm decisions when necessary, is basically most practical and successful.

All too often the father becomes a discipline figure. The mother tells the child that his father will punish him when he arrives home. Sometimes the father encourages this himself. The child should not be led to believe that his father is to be feared. The child should know that both parents agree and are consistent.

Many children look to their fathers as an idol. When young they often want to be in the same occupation. A father gets much pleasure from this. Many children actually do follow their father's footsteps even as they grow into adulthood.

Firm When Needed
A father can be many things to many different children. He should try to spend available time being a friend and guide. He should be warm, affectionate, and firm when needed.

Perhaps one of his most important responsibilities is to be a consultant both to the child and mother. His judgment should be sought. When both parents work closely together discussing plans and problems, the results are usually satisfying to all. The child receives more consistent treatment and gains a greater feeling for the family unit.

There is little doubt that a father's role is important to the growth of a child. The father-child relationship should be one of mutual respect and confidence. His involvement whenever possible is a must. Both the child and father will find a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction with each other.
