Elections' Department Considering Procedure

The elections' division of the Jackson county clerk's office is giving thought these days to planning which must be done in case Oregon's tax program is referred to the people in a special election in October, according to County Clerk Marvin Madden.

It is a rather frustrating situation, Madden explained, No one knows whether or not there will be a referendum, but in case there is one, all the machinery will have to be set up and ready to go.

The most difficult part of the planning is probably in the area of absentee ballots, Madden explained. Voters cannot apply for the 30-day deadline.

The ballot title for the proposal to refer Oregon's recently passed tax measure to the people has been prepared by the attorney general's office and was turned in July 5, according to Representative Ed Branchfield.

Protest Possible However, under Oregon law, a protest regarding the ballot title may be appealed to the state supreme court up to 20 days after the title is prepared. This means that taxpayers have until July 26 to protest if prepared ballot title. It also means that promoters of the referendum will not be obtaining signatures on petitions to launch the referendum until July 26.
