Many Public Officials Caught in Rights Disputes

By AL KUETTNER UPI Correspondent

With the integration problem breaking out all over the country, some non-Southern public officials are finding themselves increasing on the firing line of the civil rights controversy.

Two key attack points in recent weeks have been New York, with a Negro population ten times the total population of Montgomery, Ala., and Chicago which has 14 times more Negroes than all residents of Jackson, Miss.

Mayor Robert Wagner of New York has walked through crowds of pickets to reach his office and Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley has been virtually routed from one of his city's parks and booted off a convention platform.

Both New York and Chicago have long been havens for Negroes who decided to leave the South. Both cities long have had their share of racial incidents. But only in recent months has the integration campaign there been stepped up to its current hot pitch.

Jobs and housing are the two biggest issues in both New York and Chicago—as they are in most of the non-Southern areas where alleged racial discrimination was an issue.

Just as a 48-hour hunger strike ended at the New York City Hall Sunday night, the Congress of Racial Equality sent fresh recruits to the office of the mayor.

Also in New York more than 200 integration pickets were arrested in a single day at construction sites where hiring discrimination was charged.

Chicago integration groups attempted to storm to the upper floors of the Chicago Board of Education building but were turned back. Many pickets have been dragged to paddy wagons by police.

"Republicans are to blame!" Daley pleaded as he retreated from a July 4 freedom rally at a public park. But the GOP, which for years has written off Chicago to the Democrats, said it wasn't so.

Integration leaders, who had gone fairly easy on the Democratic organization commanded by Daley, began beating a path to his door this summer. He has been confronted by as many as 500 pickets demanding such things as a bi-racial committee. He has worked with Negro leaders in granting some demands.

Fears White Exodus

Integrationists claim that Daley has dragged his feet on moving Negro pupils into white schools for fear of a great white exodus from the city. The move to suburbia cost Chicago more than 100,000 population in the 1950s. At the same time, the Negro population shot upward.

While playing the tense situation with caution, Daley has been firm on one point of confrontation with demonstrators: "If a public office is to be used for public business, taking over of the office by anyone is not proper and interferes with public business."

Wagner, referring to the nationwide civil rights struggle as "pent-up protests against 100 years of discrimination and indignity," asked for a special New York legislative session to enact laws to promote desegregation.

African Groups May Have Conflict

By NEIL SMITH

Johannesburg—(UPI)—South Africa may be facing a period in which rival African terrorist groups divide their time between striking at the whites and fighting each other.

There are growing indications that the rise of prominence of a terrorist faction called Poqo has upset Africans who are bitterly opposed to Poqo's political affiliate, the banned Pan-African Congress (PAC). Poqo, with its emphasis on brutality and murder, has stolen the South African headlines for the past six months. This has tended to obscure the fact that it represents the terror wing of only one of the two major African political organizations in the republic.

Both these organizations, the PAC and the African National Congress (ANC) have been outlawed, but are said to be active underground.

Before their banning, intensive rivalry between them already had led to violence. Now there are signs that further fighting may be on the way—this time between supporters of the PAC-spawned Poqo and its ANC equivalent, Umkonto We Sizwe (Spear of the Nation). Umkonto We Sizwe dates to the end of 1961. Unlike Poqo, it claims that its ranks include people of all races.

When Umkonto first introduced itself to the South African public with a clandestine pamphlet, it emphasized this multi-racial aspect.

At that time, Umkonto claimed links with no other African political body. But at the Moshi Afro-Asian solidarity conference in Tanganyika earlier this year, delegates of the African National Congress announced that Umkonto had placed its forces at the ANC's disposal.

Dangerous Sphere

This in itself was enough to move the former political rivalry between PAC and ANC into the more dangerous sphere of the new terrorist offshoots.

Umkonto has been active for many months and is said to be responsible for a wave of sabotage against railway and communications links in South Africa. As far as is known, Umkonto's activities have caused some inconvenience but no loss of life. Its white supporters and planners are believed to include former members of the banned Communist party of South Africa.

Certainly, Umkonto's sabotage attempts, while often clumsy, show a discipline and planning that contrasts with the Mau Mau-like mumbo jumbo and acts of gross brutality associated with Poqo.

Reports from the African townships on the edge of Johannesburg say a behind-the-scenes struggle already is in progress with the two rival terrorist organizations vying for support of key township residents.

Fear Activities

The brutality of Poqo is producing a reaction among those Africans who, while militantly opposed to the white South African government, are not opposed to whites as such. Some of them fear Poqo's activities will create a bad image for African nationalism abroad, in much the same way as Mau Mau stained the image of nationalism in Kenya. Others believe that in a country with a 25 per cent minority of whites, there is no future for an ideology based purely on anti-whitism.

In recent weeks, a series of meetings have taken place in the Johannesburg African townships in an effort to check the growing influence of Poqo. Poqo reportedly has retaliated by threatening the "traitors" with violence.

Fighting between rival African terrorist groups will do nothing to aid the cause of African nationalism in the republic. If anything, it will place the white man still more firmly in the saddle.
