Hemlines Still Short At Dior

Paris — (UPI) — The House of Christian Dior today launched a collection emphasizing belted waists, wide shoulders and keeping skirts just barely covering the knees.

The fall-winter collection, designed by Marc Bohan, included suits with short, semi-skirted jackets and straight skirts.

Dior also showed a "morning suit" — a longer, fitted jacket buttoned high to the neck and worn over a belted jumper.

For street wear he showed a two-piece dress that bloused at the hip. Many of his skirts were cinched around the waist with leather belts. Sleeves were long and cuffed.

Coats had large collars. Some that were belted had wide arm-holes and accentuated shoulders.

New Green

The big color in the Dior collection was "Christmas tree green."

By some curious law in the fashion world, store buyers around the world copy a major change only if it comes from Dior, Givenchy or Balenciaga.

The House of Dior presented its shoe collection Wednesday. In line with the fashion for knee-high boots, several varieties were shown: in black leather, laced up the front, in a flat black pony fur and chateaux silk sprinkled with jet beads for evening.

The tall boots showed up again Wednesday in the collection of Michel Goma, the first he has made for the House of Jean Patou. The model wore them with an unusual camel's hair coat with panels slit to the waist that swished when she walked.

Goma's silhouette was a "jockey" line: the backs of suits, dresses and coats were as blousey as a horse rider's at the Irish Derby. His coats were fuller than last year's but still with straight lines. Many had a raised shoulder and blouse sleeves.

Gray Flannel Suits Mark Guy Laroche Collection

By ALINE MOSBY
United Press International

Paris — (UPI) — "The woman in the gray flannel suit" will be on the commuter trains this year.

Designer Guy Laroche, presenting his collection in the fall-winter Paris fashion week, paraded his pretty mannequins in charcoal gray wool suits and dresses, as did the House of Nina Ricci Tuesday.

One suit that could be paired with a lady executive's briefcase, for example, had a collarless jacket to mid-hip, loosely cinched with a narrow brown leather belt and garnished with four little flap pockets. His suit shoulders were natural and the narrow skirts just hid the knee.

His charcoal gray dresses, slim as a reed, were moulded through the waist and usually beltless, following the princess line that appears to be the main dress silhouette for winter.

Gray for Evening

Laroche even went gray for evening. A sky gray wool ribbed cocktail suit with a short, open jacket had a lining of dark gray oilecloth-like fabric with a matching tam.

Laroche also splashed pink throughout the collections. He showed narrow deep pink wool coats, princess-line pale pink crepe cocktail dresses and pink-and-gray tweed suits.

One pink coat had a taupe silk lining, with pink shirt and taupe blouse underneath. A cocktail outfit was of sparkling pink brocade, a narrow skirt topped by a casual pull-over.

Another Laroche trend was fur dresses, vests and fur sleeves on one cloth coat. Despite the wilting July heat, his models managed to keep walking in such winter anti-frosters as a black seal coat with leopard collar and matching hat. A black wool gabardine coat had black mink sleeves. The audience decided his mannequins in brown-and-white ponyskin suits would be snug in a chilly English home but definitely overheated in the United States.

Recognizes Curves

Laroche definitely recognized that females have curves. His simple princess-line wool dresses with long sleeves were usually beltless and with a seam or gathers underneath the bustline.

The same flattering feminine line continued into the cocktail dresses. He showed many beige, white and pink crepes as well as traditional black, and all were short.

Two coats that brought applause were one of navy blue seal, over a navy blue crepe dress, and another of black satiny oilecloth like cloth, belted and pert, with black seal collar and cuffs. The model peeled out of this to show a silky short evening shift of the same satiny cloth with a shirred front and crossed straps over the bare back.

'Summerizing' Tricks Listed

An ingenious decorator from Virginia suggests a special trick with paint to make a room look cooler. Just cover "warm-looking" washable objects—such as dark lamp bases and plant stands—with water-soluble paint.

Come fall, wash the paint off with soap or detergent suds—and your "summerizing" will vanish along with the hot weather.

When Actor Philip Hanson recently gave his one-man dramatic show, "The Rebels" at Southern Oregon college, Ashland, his first teacher of dramatics was in the audience. Mrs. John D. Mannhalter, who now lives in Grants Pass, was on the faculty at Roosevelt High school when Mr. Hanson was a student there and she started him on an acting career by casting him in school productions and coaching him in the basic theories of dramatic art. This was the first time Mrs. Mannhalter had seen Mr. Hanson present a one-man show and afterwards she said she had been deeply moved by his presentation of historic speeches and writings of some of this nation's great men. Mr. Hanson has completed an engagement in Cincinnati, Ohio, at the Playhouse in the Park where he played the lead in Harold Pinier's "The Caretaker", and returned to Ashland last night for the opening of the Oregon Shakespearean festival. The actor, who has both played in and directed productions for the festival, this year took over the Institute of Renaissance studies after the death of Dr. Margery Bailey, former professor at Stanford university, who has headed the institute for a number of years.
