litical crisis which has seen its Baath government maneuver repeatedly to avoid an open clash with the non-Baathists.

Iraq recently announced the crushing of "a vile Communist plot," but the reports reaching here indicate that the plotters were by no means only Communist.

In both Iraq and Syria observers believe the trouble stem from Baath insistence on placing its own men - however inexperienced - in key positions.

This policy is claimed to be fostering a steadily increasing anti-Baath attitude in the civil service and the armed forces, where seniority has sometimes been ignored.

The Syrian crisis began last month with a Baathist bid to clip the wings of Defense Minister Ziad Al Hariri, a man with a strong personal following in the army, by transferring abroad or discharging a number of his close army associates.

Hariri battled the move bitterly.

But the National Revolutionary Council stripped Hariri of his post and sent him to European exile July 8.

in doubt the establishment of the Tripartite United Arab federation of Iraq, Syria and Egypt.

Reason Complex

The reasons for the clash are complex. Both support Arab nationalism and Arab unity but they differ diametrically on who should lead this part of the world.

No such figure as Hariri yet exists in Iraq. But there the anger against the "Baathisation" of the army appears to have been a major factor in the recent brief uprising at the strategic El Rashid military camp outside Baghdad, according to reports received here through diplomatic channels.

Federal Case Enters Third Day

The case of Capital Sky Park versus W. I. Kesterson, Klamath Falls, a rescission of contract action, continued in federal court here yesterday and was resumed again this morning.

Judge John F. Kilkenny is presiding at this term of the U.S. district court, which opened Monday.

The camp contains a large number of Communist and Kurdish prisoners, and the reports claim that most of these were released and armed by disident army units in preparation for a march on Baghdad.

Something like two-thirds of the Iraqi army is presently engaged in the campaign against the Kurds national-ists in the north.

Any serious trouble in the remaining units could face the Baath administration with a serious danger.

Both in Syria and Iraq there is also discontent among
