Impressive Performance Given Of Shakespeare's 'Henry V'

It is certainly nothing new to say that Shakespeare's writings are for all time. However, one cannot but reiterate this after such a play as "The Life of King Henry V." This history was given an impressive performance Saturday night in Ashland, to a standing-room-only audience, bringing to a close the first four-play cycle of the 23rd annual season which opened Wednesday night.

Director Jerry Turner in his notes says that Henry is "governed more by policy than temperament, more by cold calculation than bright courage." If he meant Stacy Keach to produce this interpretation, this reviewer believes that he failed.

At any rate, those who enjoy seeing an Elizabethan king played with intelligence, warmth and commanding presence, should see this production.

Richard Graham reads the lines of the chorus in this play, and does them exceedingly well. The narration aids the audience greatly and it is good to have these connecting portions presented so well. Indeed, the audience should listen not only because the narration carries the trend of the plot, but should heed the admonition "Work, work your thoughts."

This play is one in which it is helpful if the listener "works his thoughts." That master craftsman, Shakespeare, always relieves his seriousness with comedy, and in "Henry V" we have again those roguish and rascals, Pistol, Bardolph and Nym, as well as the soldiers Gower and Fluellen, to make the listeners laugh.

Charles Taylor gives a sprightly performance as Pistol, particularly in the Peck-eating scene, and Edward S. Brubaker plays Bardolph with gusto. Stanley Elsdon and James Smith make a good comedy pair as Gower and Fluellen; Smith is particularly effective.

The actors cast as Frenchmen are not given as much opportunity to display dramatic talent in this play as are the Englishmen. However, Daniel J. Hoppe gives a good performance as the vacillating Charles VI of France and Earl Boen plays the Dauphin, Lewis, with considerable flair.

It is commonly known that many Frenchmen have little use for the English, even today, and it must have been true in Shakespeare's time.

Registrations Still Available for Camp At Diamond Lake

Girls between 8 and 16 years old may still register for the YMCA girls summer camp at Diamond Lake from Aug. 4 through 10, according to Mrs. Lanell Wilkes, program director for the camp.

She added that girls interested in the program should register at the Medford YMCA as soon as possible since only a limited number of reservations are still available.

The week-long program of activities will include archery, swimming, boating, canoeing, riflery, fishing, hiking, crafts and camp games. An overnight camping trip also is being planned.

Of special interest this year will be the counselors-in-training program, Mrs. Wilkes said. This will be available to girls 15 and 16 years of age. The course will include fundamentals of camp life, child care and techniques for organizing and instructing camp skills.

This is a two-year training program with the girls paying regular campers fee the first year and half fee the second year. Upon completion of the training program, the girls will be fully qualified to serve in the capacity of paid counselors.

Mrs. Wilkes indicated that this is an outstanding training opportunity for girls interested in this field. Miss Pat Welch, Portland, who will serve as CIT counselor, has a background of many years experience working with counselors-in-training at the various Camp Fire camps throughout the state.

Mrs. Wilkes announced that her staff will include Mrs. Barney Nunley, Miss Dianna Bewley and Mrs. Sandra Ward. Miss Welch will serve as CIT counselor and Mrs. Charles Darling and Miss Wilkes will be in charge of the waterfront.

Jack Strong will instruct on the new rifle range and also be in charge of the fishing. Craft instructor and canteen director will be Mrs. Rayma Bateman, who teaches at West Side school in Medford. The cook will be Mrs. Grace Whitlow, who is head cook for O'Neill Elementary school, Klamath Falls. She will be assisted by Mrs. Carrie Roberts, Ashland. Nurses will be Mrs. Martha Donahue and Mrs. Reba Giles of the Medford public schools.

To Meet Wednesday Parents and campers will meet at the Medford YMCA at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, July 31. During this time, the camp program will be outlined more fully for parents and girls will be given their required pre-camp physical examinations.

It has been stressed that YMCA membership is not required for registration in the summer camp. The camp is available to all girls; however, advance registration is required to insure adequate supervision and facilities.
