Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

A LAD IN a rich Main Line suburb came home one evening in a lather to report, "They've turned up a wonderful new magic record player at school. You don't have to plug it in any place. You don't even need electricity to make it play. All you have to do is wind it up with a crank!"

In a crowded department store a man dropped a shopping list his wife had given him, and spent several anxious moments retrieving it from under the feet of the jostling throng. Not until he was out on the sidewalk did he discover that the trampled-upon paper he had snatched up was not, alas, his shopping list, but a printed reminder the executive office evidently had passed out to every employee. It read, in big, red, capital letters: "Remember: try to sell last year's merchandise first!"

Ernest Borgnine spotted a spiffy new motorboat being towed on a trailer. The boat bore on its stern the name "Instant Fun," and under this the line, "Just add water."

STILL SLUGGISH UPTURN

Despite the fact that the U.S. economy is, as President Kennedy says, still showing "significant progress," this advance continues next to the weakest of the five post-World War II business upswings.

The rise in industrial production is the key yardstick by which we measure the power of a business upturn. As of June, the last reporting date, this index was 21 per cent above the level of February 1961 — the low of the last recession. At this stage in the postwar business advances of all but that of 1954-57, the percentage increase in the index was greater.

Admittedly, new business peaks are being recorded month after month in personal incomes, profits, employment, etc. If they weren't being chalked up, we'd be clearly into another recession.

But the economy is not expanding fast enough to provide jobs for our mounting number of workers.

The overall unemployment rate hangs at 5.7 per cent and joblessness among teen-agers is a frightening 16 per cent. We can train and retrain and re-retrain these young men and women, but unless the economy is growing at a sufficient pace, there still will not be jobs for them or for older workers displaced by automation. In the words of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, "Without adequate growth, training can go to waste and even add to feelings of frustration."

Nor is the economy expanding fast enough to provide taxes to cover government spending and balance the federal budget.

The pickup in business so far this year has added to tax collections and reduced original estimates of budget deficits. Nevertheless, the deficit in the year that ended June 30 came to $6.2 billion — which is a lot of red ink — and there's no question but that the budget in the current year is to be unbalanced.

Here's the record of industrial production in the 1961-? business upturn as compared with the record in the 28th month of previous postwar upturns. The statistics were compiled by the National Bureau of Economic Research.

Date Low Bus. Cycle	Index at Low	Life of Bus. Upturn	Index 28 Mo. After Low	% Rise at 28th Mo.
Oct. 1945	56.1	37 Months	68.1	21.4
Oct. 1949	62.6	45 Months	82.7	32.1
Aug. 1954	85.4	35 Months	102.2	19.7
Apr. 1958	87.8	25 Months	108.7	23.8
Feb. 1961	103.4	?	125.1	21.0

The comparative sluggishness of this economic advance shows up even more vividly when the measurement is the percentage increase in the industrial production index from the date of its low to the 28th month after. (The trough of this index and of a general recession do not necessarily coincide.) The comparisons for the five upturns are: 31.2 per cent, 32.1 per cent, 18 per cent, 23.8 per cent, 21 per cent.

The older a business upturn, the greater is the danger of its death. This business upturn will be 30 months old Thursday, which means it's "old." The older a business upturn, the greater is the need for new stimulants to give it new life. We cannot count on important rate increases in consumer or business spending from today's levels unless consumers and businessmen get additional incentives to spend. As for federal government spending, we're trying to put a lid on that.

Where can we turn for stimulants, then? Only to tax reduction to give consumers extra funds to spend on things and non-things and to give industry an extra push to invest in modern cost-cutting plans and equipment.

But the tax bill isn't even out of the House Ways and Means Committee, and guesses about its timing are getting more and more fuzzy. If the uncertainty which is mounting on just about every economic issue these days continues much longer, it by itself, can hurt our economy.

Frigate Bird Catches Fish In Mid-air Instead of Water

They usually beat the weather bureau forecasts by at least 24 hours. In fact, they were the barometers by which early residents of coastal areas knew of the approach of a high wind or a hurricane. They are still operating just as accurately and effectively today. "They," in this instance, are not the shiny instruments or volumes of charts and graphs in a modern weather bureau, but feathered creatures of the air—the man-o-war birds which are scientifically known as the Frigate birds.

Walt Whitman, beloved poet of yesteryear, said of the Frigate bird, "Thou art all wings." He surely must have been familiar with this feathered creature of the upper air for the description was apt. The Frigate bird is more wing than body, more aerial than terrestrial, a creature of the upper air, a bird that developed the art of flight to its highest perfection.

Nature designed it for sustained flight, so much so that the uninformed bird student believed the bird actually lived all its life in the air. They thought the Frigate bird touched the land only when death took it out of the sky. Some even thought the bird hatched and carried its young on its back.

Weak Legs

We know now, of course, that the man-o-war bird actually nests in trees on an isolated island, but that its legs are useless for walking. They are strong enough only to allow the bird to perch on a limb or awkwardly scramble from one side of its stick nest to the other. Contrary to what the ancients thought, the Frigate bird comes to rest on its lonely island when day is done.

The Frigate bird never dives into the water after a fish as does the seagull, pelican, or tern, but utilizes its flight mastery to actually catch fish in the air. To do this, it watches until some gull or tern dives for a fish, then it sweeps toward the smaller bird. The gull seeing this black, diving object coming towards it, drops the fish in order to escape what it thinks is a dangerous enemy. The Frigate bird, with a flashing sweep, grabs the falling fish in mid-air. Therefore, this graceful king of the air always forces others to do its fishing.

Knowledge of Currents

The bird has an uncanny knowledge of thermal currents and ascending and descending air masses. It allows the rising current to carry it upward, then the bird glides into other currents when the one it is using is losing its lifting power. By this method the bird can remain aloft for long periods of time without once using a single wing stroke.

To the human watcher on the ground, the hurricane bird presents a strange silhouette against the sky with its angular, swept-back wings and long, streaming tail plumes. Little wonder that many people attach strange beliefs to the bird's appearance.

Some believed it foretold of war hence, the name "man-o'war" bird. Others called it the "hurricane bird" for it always appeared just before a storm. It is usually observed then, at least 24 hours before the wind starts to blow and hours before the weather men foretell of a storm. The weather bureau doesn't give the word to the bird; the bird knew it a long time before the machines registered a change.

WE of the Medford Beauty School wish to apologize to our many customers.
Because of the smallest enrollment of advanced students we've had since moving to our new location, we are not always able to accept appointments for everyone. This situation will be remedied by the end of the summer. In the meantime we'll do our best to serve all.
