Cancer of Ovary Difficult To Recognize And Treat

With all the great advances in modern medicine, we physicians have not been able to do very well in the matter of recognizing and treating cancer of the ovary. The great trouble is that by the time the cancer is recognized, in four out of five cases, it is inoperable and very little can be done to save the woman. Drs. Turner, ReMine and Dockerty of the Mayo Clinic say that if the cancer could always be found while it is limited to the ovary, 92.1 per cent of the women could be cured by a surgeon.

One reason why cancers of the ovary are so seldom recognized in an early stage is that symptoms appear late, and then they are likely to be vague. On studying 128 patients, Drs. Hesselbine and Smith found that at the beginning, the symptoms were abdominal pain and enlargement, perhaps some urinary symptoms, a feeling of abdominal pressure, and rarely, nausea, vomiting, constipation and backache. Such symptoms, of course, are a hundred times more likely to be due to some minor cause than to a cancer of the ovary.

According to Prof. George C. Lewis Jr., of Philadelphia, another man who has recently studied this problem, the only way in which women can have a cancer of an ovary found in time is to have a pelvic examination made every six months, after they are 30 years of age.

I recently read a report by L. Adelson about five cases in which a person drank the isopropyl rubbing alcohol which is readily obtainable in any drug store and many grocery stores. These people drank varying amounts of the substance and survived for periods ranging from only a few hours to 15 days. They all became very ill, and went into a deep sleep, from which they could not be roused. Obviously, rubbing alcohol had better be used only for rubbing. Wood alcohol is also a terrible poison, causing blindness and death.

Many persons are slowly dying with often unrecognized little strokes. To know about these, read the booklet, "Little Strokes," by Dr. Alvares. To obtain your copy, send 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Dr. Walter C. Alvares, Dept. MMT, Box 957, Des Moines 4, Iowa.
