Fire in Northeast Oregon Contained The blaze, about 25 miles northeast of Enterprise in the Wallowa - Whitman National forest, had been controlled earlier but was fanned anew. Thirty-nine men were added Thursday night to the 45 already fighting the lightning-caused blaze. The fire burned over grass with some scattered timber in rugged country and hand equipment was used, along with chemicals dropped by air. The Forest Service reported four small man-caused blazes in National Forest land were controlled. Two were in the Wallowa-Whitman forest, and one each in the Malheur and Winema forests. Despite hot and drying weather, only four small fires were reported on state-protected lands. The largest was half an acre near Gold Hill in Southern Oregon.
