

Festival Orchestra Wearing Off Rough Edges of Opening Night

By DR. HERBERT CECIL
Head of Music Department
Southern Oregon College

The second concert of the Britt Music Festival, presented at 8 p.m. Tuesday, saw the festival orchestra and its conductor, John Trudeau, wearing off some of the rough edges that were evidenced in their opening concert on Sunday, Aug. 11.

There were undoubtedly a few "opening day jitters" in the first concert because last night's concert found both orchestra and conductor more relaxed and the ensemble sound much improved.

The program opened again with Ernie Hood's very effective fanfare written especially for this festival. Following the fanfare was Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 in F Major. Bach wrote six compositions in the form of the Baroque concerto grosso and dedicated them to the Margrave of Brandenburg in 1721. In the concerto grosso a small group of solo instruments called the concertino are aided and abetted by the strings of the orchestra. Bach used a different group of solo instruments in each of his Brandenburg concerti and the first one calls for a concerto of two horns, three oboes, a bassoon, and a solo violin. The soloists last evening were Russell White and Daniel Havens, horns; Peter Christ, Pat Mills, and Douglas Zeh, oboes; Gordon Solie, bassoon; and Charles Heiden, violin. As we have already learned to expect from the festival orchestra, the soloists were all excellent with a special accolade due to Russell White.

Trumpet Soloist
The second number last night presented trumpet soloist James Smith in a performance of Haydn's Concerto in E Flat for trumpet and orchestra. This work was composed in 1796, which is not particularly interesting except for the fact that the first trumpets with valves were not made until about 25 years later. Haydn wrote the concerto for an instrument which had four keys somewhat like the keys on a clarinet or saxophone of the present time. The piece is difficult enough for a player using a modern trumpet but the difficulties must have been tremendous for a player of the keyed trumpet of 1796.

Mr. Smith is a master of his instrument. His tone is even and beautifully controlled throughout the entire range and he surmounts the difficult passages with an ease which speaks for the countless hours of practice which have enabled him to attain the mastery he possesses. Following the intermission Mr. Smith was heard again in "The Hollow Men," written for solo trumpet and string orchestra by Vincent Persichetti. Persichetti is an American composer of the present time, having been born in 1915 in Philadelphia and is now on the composition staff of the Juilliard School of Music in New York City.

"The Hollow Men" was composed in 1946 and received its inspiration from T. S. Eliot's poem of the same name. The composition is somewhat reminiscent of a composition written in 1940 by Aaron Copland called "Quiet City," also for solo trumpet and strings. "The Hollow Men" is somewhat nostalgic in character, basically lyric in form and another example of good 20th century American music.

The final selection on last night's concert was the Handel-Harty "Water Music Suite." Since it was also played at the opening concert, this writer did not stay to hear it again.

An Excellent Start
The concert last night demonstrated that the Britt Festival is off to an excellent start. A couple of suggestions could be made to help things along a little. Perhaps a spot light could be set up over head someplace to illumine the soloists. Mr. Smith was barely distinguishable and his face was not discernible at all.

Audiences the world over do not interrupt compound movement selections with applause between movements. Mr. Trudeau should educate his Britt Festival audiences to follow this tradition. He can do so with his baton. Actually it is a tradition based on sound logic because a concerto is not three separate ideas musically; it is one idea broken into segments similar to paragraphs or chapters in our written language.

One final and we hope it is a human complaint. The program lists about three columns of credits for work done and materials donated to help the festival get under way. There is an apology to those that were omitted; however, by far the most expensive single piece of equipment to the festival is the Steinway grand piano loaned by the music department of Southern Oregon College.

We did not receive a mention in the program so your writer humbly begs leave to point out that the SOC Music Department is willing to back the festival (with the blessing of President Stevenson) by letting our pride and joy sit out-of-doors for three weeks when the Steinway instruction manual plainly says "Whatever you do with your Steinway, guard it from extremes of temperature and humidity changes!"

This is the final review which will be submitted by this writer for the festival. We wish them well during the remainder of the season and hope that the project can continue to grow and flourish.

Ballot Title Is Given Initiative
Salem—UPI—A ballot title and statement of purpose were assigned today to the steelhead and salmon fishing initiative filed recently, Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton announced.

The title he assigned states: "Prohibiting commercial fishing for salmon, steelhead." He lists the purpose as: "Prohibits commercial fishing for salmon and steelhead in all Oregon inland waters, including boundary rivers. Prohibits all commercial dealings in fish taken illegally."

On Aug. 8 a sportsmen's group filed preliminary petitions for an initiative to close all Oregon inland waters to commercial salmon and steelhead fishing.

If the measure gets on the November, 1964, general election and is approved by the people, it would mean the end of commercial salmon fishing on the Columbia river.

Howard Predicts Enough Signatures
Salem—UPI—Albany publisher J. Francis Howard predicted today he would get more than enough signatures to refer to voters the 1963 legislature's $60 million revenue package — but he fears they may not be certified in time. Howard said "things are coming along lots better. I was pessimistic last week, but everything has improved and the signatures are rolling in. I got a call from two men in Eugene today. One had gotten 260 signatures, another 175. A man in Portland said he got 178 signatures in just a few minutes."

Jack Thompson, elections supervisor, said he made a spot check of several county clerks Monday, and estimated between 1,000 and 1,500 signatures already had been obtained. Howard, who said petitions were now out throughout the state, said he had no idea how many already had been signed.

He said accord on such steps "are in the interest of all parties over more complicated issues such as a ban on underground nuclear tests."

But Soviet disarmament negotiator Semyon K. Tsarapkin told United Press International afterwards that he "cannot accept" the American proposal.
