The Real Jack Spratt Story

Jack Spratt could eat no fat
Because upon his plate
His wife kept serving the diet that
She ate to curb her weight.

He hungered for goodies by the pound,
Just oosing calories,
But all she gave him was top-ground round
And sometimes cottage cheese.

Poor Jack! He whimpered he hadn't seen
A good square meal in years.
So while she reduced to size 14,
Spratt was reduced to tears!

—Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

Quips and Quotes

A little boy was showing his new friend around the house. When he got to the bathroom, he pointed to the scale and warned: "Stay away from that—all I know is that when you stand on it, it gets you mad!"

—Frances Benson

Can't Beat the Prices

We're taking separate vacations this year,
We've already planned on where we'll go:

I'm taking mine on the back-yard bench,
She's taking hers in the patio.

—Stephen Schlitzer

A magician asked somebody in the audience to give him a blank slip of paper. He tore this into shreds and threw the pieces into his top hat. Then he reached into the hat and pulled out a $100 bill.

"How did you do that?" somebody asked.
"It's simple," he replied. "In the hat I have a rabbit who's a philanthropist."

—George Bevins

The husband began to tell his favorite joke at a party, but before he got halfway his wife corrected him on a minor point. A little later, she made other corrections, and she even retold the punch line in her own version.

The husband was exasperated. "We've been married 25 years," he told the guests, "and she still corrects everything I say."

"Twenty-six years," the wife said.

All through the supermarket shopping trip, the little youngster had been getting into trouble, and nothing his mother did could curb him. In total frustration, the mother shouted down the aisle at him, "All right, do anything you want to!"

And then she was heard muttering to herself: "Now let's see you disobey that."

One way to keep a teen-ager away from the car is to ask him to wash it.

"Well... At least I can stop worrying about her not being seaworthy."
