Convicted Tycoon Billie Sol Estes Harvests Troubles in Recent Weeks

By JAMES T. YOUNG
United Press International
Pecos, Tex. — Convicted farm tycoon Billie Sol Estes is harvesting more troubles. In the last two weeks, a cross was burned on his front lawn, a sniper's bullet was fired into his living room window. The federal government slapped a $10.5 million tax lien against everything he still owns. He is awaiting appeal of fraud and conspiracy trials that gave him 23 years of state and federal prison sentences. And now, they want to close "Estesland."

It was his latest deal, penny-ante by his previous standards. First he erected a bright neon sign that said "The Home of Billie Sol Estes." Then he opened his palatial home, sometimes dubbed the "Pecos palace," to the public at $5 per carload. He and his wife and three children departed.

The town fathers of Pecos promptly said he was breaking the zoning ordinances and made plans to close it.
Reasonable Time
Estes has moved to Abilene, Tex., and Pecos has notified him that if he does not close the house "within reasonable time" he will face a maximum fine of $200 per day until he complies. Estes has indicated he may take the matter to court.

A $200 daily fine could cut into Estes profits from the tour. In fact, it probably would put him in the red $175 per day.

Guide E. L. Brewer, a former Abilene policeman who will admit only to being a "house guest," says "quite a few" tourists show up. Neighbors dispute this. Some 10-12 cars drive up each day, but only three to four families hand over cash for the 20-minute tour.

The rest walk around the front lawn as big as a baseball infield and take pictures. Anyone wishing to take pictures inside pays an extra $20.

The L-shaped, $150,000 home is ranch-style, part one-story and part two-story. The tourists who see it may be treading on property that some day may belong to Uncle Sam.

Estes kept the home when he was adjudged bankrupt last year. But the Internal Revenue service could take it to satisfy tax claims. It could take everything he owns or buys except his clothing, children's school books, $500 worth of personal effects and $250 worth of books or tools.

Brewer points out that the furnishings alone are worth quite a bit more. The master bathroom fixtures are gold. The house has four marble fireplaces, three patios, seven bedrooms, two kitchens, a swimming pool, two tennis courts, three barbecue pits and four other bathrooms.

A built-in inter-com system (hi-fi and stereo) and six telephones add to the comforts of home.

Estes himself moved to Abilene last week and is serving in a corporation to better the underprivileged. He cannot buy a house lest the government slap a tax claim on it. But the corporation could buy one he could use.

Filed Lien
The Internal Revenue service, apparently alerted to reports Estes would move to Abilene, filed its big tax lien against him in Abilene as well as in Pecos and El Paso, Tex. It also plans to file a claim in bankruptcy court at El Paso, joining hundreds of others seeking a piece of the crumpled Estes fertilizer and grain empire that once was estimated at $150 million.

Brewer and his 19-year-old son-in-law Michael Bridges of Abilene and a yard man now live in the house where Estes dickered and dealt.

Brewer says he feels out of place in the house. Standing in the 30-by-60-foot living room, he flicked his cigarette into three live palms at one end of the room. He complained of the size of the house and he closed off the upstairs section, using it as living quarters.

Flirt Hole
The living room is the most prominent feature. It has the three palms, three sets of furniture and the bullet hole is prominent in the window.
Three couches are in the living room—two traditional and one modern. The chairs also are traditional and modern. If there are antiques, they are not marked as such. There are no rugs on the stone floor.

A medium-sized den and a kitchen are on the tour. Then comes the master bedroom with a seven-foot bed, a wall-covering mirror, a vast built-in bureau, two dressing tables and a closet as big as a school bus. The closet is empty.
Then there's the "guest house." Sometimes it is called "the Truman wing," since it was built for an expected but never fulfilled visit by then-President Harry S. Truman. It has two bedrooms, two patios, a huge living room and a superbly equipped kitchen.

There is a museum-like atmosphere. Signs read: "Do not handle," "Stay on the walkway," and "Keep out."

Crews Rebuilding Transmission System

Construction crews of Pacific Power and Light company have begun rebuilding a section of the company's North Umpqua transmission system to provide greater power delivery capacity for the second circuit supplying energy from the seven hydroelectric plants on the river.

Setting new poles and stringing larger conductors for the Toketee plant to the Soda Springs plant will increase its capacity for delivery of power in event of trouble affecting the main transmission circuit from the power plants into the Dixonville substation near Roseburg.

Frank Bash, Medford, Copco division manager for the company, reported the crews later will shift to another section of line nearer the Roseburg end of the main transmission circuit. This work will continue a project started last year.
"The work will require an expenditure this year of almost a quarter-million dollars, and ultimately will permit delivery of greater amounts of energy into the company's system from the North Umpqua plants," Bash explained.

AGAINST THE TREND

Monrovia, Calif. — The tax rate keeps going down in Monrovia. The city council Tuesday night approved a tax rate of $1.64 per $100 of assessed valuation, a cut of two cents. The rate has been lowered annually for the past 10 years.
