Teller Continues Outspoken Position Against Test Ban

Washington—Physicist Edward Teller Wednesday continued his outspoken insistence that U. S. security would be jeopardized by ratification of the nuclear test ban treaty.

Teller spoke out again less than 24 hours after President Kennedy had taken issue with Senate testimony by Teller that this country was behind the Soviet Union in anti-missile system development and that ratification would be a grave mistake.

The H-bomb developer noted that "men of the highest responsibility" disagreed with him and added: "I hope they are right, but on this hope alone I would not care to base the future of this country."

Teller spoke at a National Press club luncheon. Teller insisted the treaty would prevent development of a missile defense which he said could save 90 per cent of American lives in a nuclear war.

Without Testing
He maintained that an anti-missile missile could not be perfected without atmospheric testing, barred by the pact. He said attempts to perfect an anti-missile missile by theory and underground tests alone would fail. He said something as complex as this must be tried to be proven effective.

Teller said the Soviet Union, "through their magnificent test series in 1961 and 1962," may have gained knowledge to enable them to perfect such a missile. He conceded that he did not know.
