Parents Should Register Their Children Early in New School

By DAVID NYDICK UPI Education Specialist After the long summer, many parents are looking forward to the resumption of school classes. This, of course, presents quite a change in routines and some preparation will be valuable.

Generally, activities might be carefully directed towards those faced in school.

Why not have the child play on the school grounds? This may help to develop a more secure feeling. He might be able to play with some of his new classmates. Any activities of this nature will reduce his fears of the unknown.

How should a child come prepared on the first day? He should not wear party clothes. Most classes will have activities planned which make normal school clothes preferable. Don't forget lunch or money to purchase it, if the first day is a full one.

Your child will want to take books, etc. These seem to give him a feeling of security. This is important so allow it. You should, however, limit these to a few basic needs. Don't buy expensive equipment. An inexpensive note book and pencil are all that will be needed. Explain this to the child and assure him that you will supply his needs as soon as the teacher indicates what they are.

Parents should not plan to enter or stay in the classrooms. Teachers are and should be giving all their attention to the students. You should send your child to school in the normal way, walking or by bus. If it should be necessary to take him, say goodbye outside the building. This will be to everyone's benefit.

The beginning of school can be a pleasant event when good judgment is used in preparing for the experience.

NO DEPRESSION FOR 25 YEARS

As of this summer 1963 it is a full quarter-century since the United States has had a depression. Let us not let this silver anniversary go unheralded for our avoidance of a major slump for so long a period is an achievement which has no parallel in world history.

It was in the summer of 1938 that the last severe business down turn in our country ended. Since then we have had five business declines, the most recent one ending in February 1961. But none of these five has even approached in magnitude the crash of 1938 or the earlier historic depression of 1929-33.

What the tens of millions of you who have become adults during the past quarter-century have experienced have been minor recessions, not depressions. You have grown up in a period of war-born shortages, war-created inflation, minor business setbacks from time to time, now an extraordinarily prolonged period of price stability. What you have known is a federal government committed by law to work for maximum employment, production, income. What you have been taught to expect from government and private enterprise is positive action to curb even modest downturns at the first signs of trouble.

You do not know what a depression can be like so here is how it was 25 years ago.

The 50-month recovery from the worst depression of all time came to an abrupt end in May 1937. The bottom of the economy seemed to drop out almost overnight. It was a youngster just beginning to dabble in the stock market — on borrowed capital, of course, for I had only the tiniest nestegg — and I'll never forget the rapidity with which my profits disappeared and I went through the wringer. The New Deal had created and still was creating anti-slump weapons but they weren't strong enough then to offset the sudden convergence of depressing forces.

The 1937-38 depression lasted only 13 months and then preparation for World War II and global war itself came along to take up the slack in every area and put us into an entirely new economic era. But in those 13 months, this is what happened:

- Industrial production Off 31.5 per cent
Non-farm employment Off 10 per cent
Monthly jobless rate Up 8.2 per cent
Personal incomes Off 11.2 per cent
Retail sales Off 14.1 per cent
Gross national product Off 11.9 per cent

In only 13 months, this happened. It was a crash and with the memory of the breadlines and bankruptcies of 1929-33 still vivid, the entire nation trembled. In comparison, in the 1960-61 recession, personal incomes scarcely changed, retail sales slipped just a bit, industrial production was off only seven per cent, the nation's total output of goods and services continued to rise.

The distinctions between the depressions of the 1930s and the recessions of the post-World War II period are immense and the reason is that we have now built in "stabilizers" which automatically come into play when the economy falters.

Today, unemployment insurance gives jobless workers spending money while they are out of work and our vast pension systems — public and private — give millions steady incomes which they spend immediately. Today, bank deposit insurance protects our savings in financial institutions and our methods of financing homes drastically limit foreclosures. Today, government spending is a constant prop under our economy and the broadening of business to include many new industries and services helps make us less sensitive to trouble in one or two big industries. Today, wages rise in bad times as well as good and support consumer spending while prices hold in bad times as well as good and support corporation profits.

We have not conquered the business cycle but for a full quarter-century we have avoided depression. With the 1961-7 upturn getting "old," we are now concentrating on tax reductions to give it new life, thereby emphasizing that we are more determined than ever to maintain our no-depression record.

Airline Mechanics Submit to Order

New York—(UPI)—The brief nationwide wildcat strike against United Air Lines (UAL) ended early Thursday in compliance with a federal restraining order that at first was ignored.

UAL mechanics and ground crews, members of the International Association of Machinists (IAM), returned to work at the start of the midnight shift at key airports in the country.

The walkout started Wednesday and continued hours after U.S. District Court Judge Bernard Decker issued the restraining order at Chicago. Decker said the order would remain in effect until he hears arguments on a UAL petition for a preliminary injunction against the IAM on Aug. 30.

The strike, which was triggered by a contract dispute, caused flight cancellations or delays in several big cities. More than a dozen flights, originating in Cleveland, Seattle, Denver and Portland, Ore., were canceled.

Dr. Ward Leaves Sizable Estate

London—(UPI)—Stephen Ward, the high living society osteopath-artist who committed suicide during his vice trial last month, left an estate of 14,620 pounds ($40,936), it was announced today.

Ward, who was convicted of living off the earnings of prostitutes, left no will, but letters of administration of his estate were granted today to his brother, Raymond Ward.

A sizable share of the estate was believed to have come from sale of some of his portraits, which were placed on sale during the trial. At the time, Ward said he put the portraits up for sale because he was broke and needed money to pay defense costs.

There was no indication of the disposition of his estate. But one of Ward's suicide notes directed that a bequest be made to Ronna Ricardo, a prostitute who testified in his defense.

Woman Arrested in Train Robbery Case

London—(UPI)—Scotland Yard detectives seeking the gang which staged history's greatest train robbery Thursday charged a woman with receiving stolen money and mobilized the nation to help in what may be the final stages of their hunt.

Mary Kazih Manson, 42, small, dark-haired and swarthy, was charged at Lindsay Court near Aylesbury — manhunt headquarters — with receiving $2,338 although she knew it had been stolen.

Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor, and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors. (Copyright 1963—General Features Corp.)

Jill F. — I want something I've never had — complete freedom.

Mack F. — She should come back to me before it's too late.

Jill F. — I can straighten myself out only by getting away from Mack and the children. I see now that I should not have married at all. What I've always craved is freedom. First I was held down by my parents, then by my mother, and now by my husband and responsibility. I see a big wonderful world outside and I want a chance to explore it. I'll agree to any arrangement Mack wants.

Mack F. — This isn't normal talk for a grown woman, but Jill hasn't been acting right for the past year. She tells me right out that she has an admirer who's waiting to take her all over the continent as soon as she's free. I can see where she'd want to get away from her bossy mother, but why me? What have I done wrong? I've worshipped her, humored her, probably spoiled her — and I want her to stay.

The Council: The important third party here is not that "admirer" waiting in the wings, nor Jill's mother (whose ears should be burning), but a professional aide. Instead of referring Mack to a lawyer who'd draw up the best divorce papers, or a doctor who'd probably try some psychotherapy on Jill, we advise him to call the local office of the Family Service Assn. of America. Their corporate finger can point his way to the right agency, where a marriage counselor will ask the right questions and work patiently, step-by-step even if it takes years, to show Jill what's really eating her and how to eradicate it.

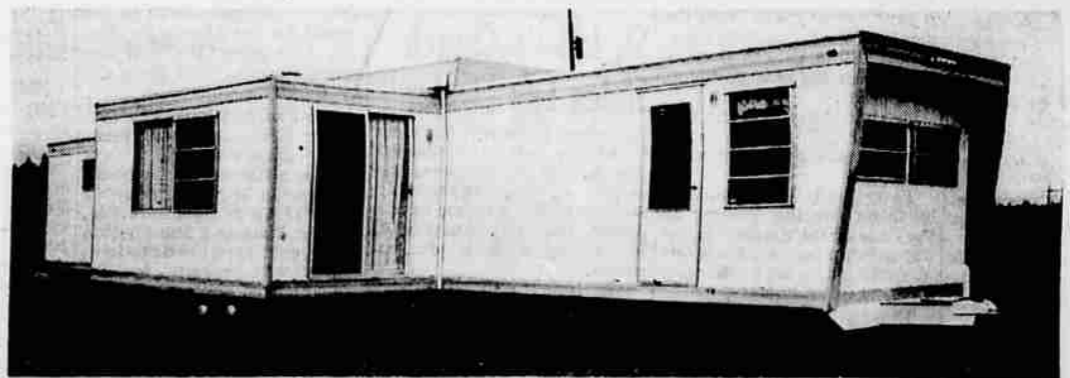

In her present confused state she can't possibly make a wise decision. Perhaps all she needs is a brief separation, followed by a return to a stronger husband — one she respects. The counselor can strengthen Mack's backbone in standing up to Jill, brooking none of her "triangle" try-outs, impressing her with his new manly stature.
