

Negro Woman Prays for Peace Prior to March

Washington—(UPI)—Soon after sunrise Wednesday Mrs. Aquilla Bateman, a 74-year-old Negro from Washington, limped on her bad leg to the foot of the Lincoln memorial, bowed her head and asked a small favor of the Lord.

She prayed for peace. Not peace among nations and not peace for evermore. She just wanted peace for this one day and in this one city.

"Oh Lord, be with us today and keep us in the hollow of your hand," she said. "May we love each other. May we get together. I pray that nobody will do anything personally bad to anybody else in Washington today."

Mrs. Bateman, a deaconess in the Baptist church, said she was the first marcher to appear at the Lincoln Memorial grounds. She wanted a front row position and she decided to put into words the stark fear that had haunted the nights and days of integration leaders, federal officials and the Washington police department.

It was the fear that Wednesday's massive march to the nation's capital would wind up in a bloody shambles.

All the ingredients were there. Two hundred thousand persons were in a highly emotional state. Many had gone without sleep. The sun was hot, it was difficult to get a drink of water or a sandwich.

And, lurking on the fringes of the march, were people and organizations who did not want the demonstration to be peaceful and orderly. They knew—and so did the leaders of the march—that a sudden burst of temper could be a spark that would ignite a bonfire that could become a holocaust.

The integration leaders took the grim gamble that a riot could set back their cause 10 years and perhaps doom it.

The fear ran like a fever through the streets from the time the marchers massed at the Washington Monument. Then two wide, sluggish rivers of humanity began moving from the monument to the Lincoln Memorial.

There was sweat, toil and tears. The sweat of thousands of persons carrying heavy placards and shuffling along under an August sun. The toil of police and the marchers' own marshals fighting to get them to a certain place at a certain time in the face of an inexorable schedule. The tears of children suddenly separated from their parents.

Toil, sweat and tears—yes. But no blood.

The program began. White voices and black voices were lifted in song. Catholic voices, Jewish voices, white voices and black voices uttered prayers and made speeches. At 4:28 p.m. Dr. Benjamin E. Mays pronounced the benediction and a soft amen rustled along the light breeze.

The crowd began to move out to buses, chartered planes, special trains, automobiles. The buses raced their motors, the planes revved their propellers, the train conductors called all aboard and the automobiles fanned out of Washington traffic onto the highways to Texas, California, New York, Chicago.

The brooding statue of Abraham Lincoln looked out across the debris of discarded newspapers, torn placards, empty sandwich bags, trodden grass. The roar of internal combustion engines filled the air. But in the midst of noise, disorder and debris, one fact remained.

Mrs. Bateman's prayer had been heeded and answered.

VFW Delegates to Nominate Officers From Floor Today

Seattle—Delegates to the 64th annual convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars were to nominate new officers today, following a floor fight over the number of nominees for one office.

The floor fight came on a proposal to change the by-laws of the organization to require no less than two nominees for the office of junior vice-commander-in-chief. Usually there is only one.

Up the Ladder

The junior vice-commander-in-chief is the number three man in the VFW. It has been customary for the holder of that position to proceed automatically up the ladder to the position of commander-in-chief.

The proposal was turned down by a 5,503 to 3,290 margin.

Andy L. Borg, Superior, Wis., who is the present VFW judge advocate general, was expected to be nominated to the junior vice commander's post.

Joseph Lombardo, senior vice commander from Brooklyn, was slated to succeed Byron Gentry, Pasadena, Calif., as commander-in-chief.

Osterberg said he was a body and fender man and his last position had been in Sioux Falls.

The money was taken from a woman's purse, according to Osterberg's signed statement, and the car from Hertz Rent-A-Car agency in Bismark.

Castro Wants New U.S. Relations

Madrid—(UPI)—Cuban Premier Fidel Castro hopes to resume diplomatic relations with the United States, according to one of the American youths who defied a State Department ban to visit Cuba.

Fifty-four of the original 59 youths were scheduled to fly back to New York today and face government sanctions for their unauthorized trip.

Three other students remained in Cuba temporarily, one returned to the United States Monday and one drowned in a swimming accident during the eight-week tour, for which the Cubans paid all expenses.

Robert Kaffke, a San Francisco State college student said Wednesday "Castro would like to resume diplomatic relations with the U.S. He told me so."

Kaffke, one of 26 students in the group from the San Francisco area, said he was favorably impressed by the guided tour of Cuba.

"I'm for socialism in the Cuban sense," he said. He added that he was not a member of any political group.

"Castro is not attempting to spread the Cuban revolution," Kaffke said.

Possible Penalties

Clinton Jencks, 19, and his wife Dee, 18, also students at San Francisco State, said they were worried about possible penalties arising from the visit.

"But the trip was worth it," Jencks said. "Now I know the truth about Cuba. The people are happy there."

He denied earlier statements attributed to him that the Cubans had never been worse off. He said he had been misunderstood.

Mrs. Jencks said representatives of the U.S. embassies in London, Amsterdam and Prague warned the group when it was en route to Cuba that its members faced possible five years' imprisonment and $5,000 fines for going to Cuba, in addition to having their passports taken away.
