Stockmen, Forest Officials Discuss Range Management

A tour of the Rogue River National forest on the Applegate and Ashland Ranger districts was made by local stockmen, forest officials, and others interested people last week.

Purpose of the two-day trip was to observe range conditions on the ground and discuss ways and means of increasing forage production, better livestock distribution, and coordinating range use with other interests.

Attending were bureau of land management personnel and representatives of local stockmen associations; J. Herbert Stone, regional forester, forest service; Avon Denham, assistant regional forester in charge of range management; George Johnson, executive secretary, Oregon Cattlemen's association; members of public lands committee, Oregon Cattlemen's association; Dr. Dillard Gates, extension range specialist; Earle Jossy, Jackson county agent; Carroll Brown, forest supervisor; and other Rogue River National forest officials.

The first day was spent observing range conditions in the Siskiyous. Areas of good stands of grass showing little use were observed indicating an opportunity for changes in management to lighten grazing use in other areas. Treatment needs of other areas were discussed.

Some of the intensive management practices agreed to be needed were fencing, grass seeding and additional water developing.

The second day was spent on ranges of the Dead Indian area. Forage use and growth were observed in and around a fenced area which provided exclusion of deer and livestock, and a plot which excluded only livestock.

Little Elk Meadow, Big Elk Meadow, and the Short Creek Burn were also observed. Discussions were held at each stop directed toward measures and management needed to increase production of the ranges and protect other resource values.

The tour was concluded with short talks by agency officials and representatives of stockmen's organizations. All agreed as to the need for research in the field of range management, and that specific problems could best be solved on the ground at the local level through mutual cooperation and effort.

Five Persons Hurt In Selma Accident

SELMA — Five persons were injured, two of them seriously, in a collision on Highway 199 near here early this morning involving a truck and two cars.

At Josephine General hospital this morning were Mrs. Nancy Duarte, 21, of Kerby, with possible head injuries, and Lester H. Allison, 53, of Eugene, with facial cuts that required extensive surgery.

Allison's wife, Evelina, and sons, Edward and William, suffered lacerations, but were released after treatment.

The accident occurred at 3:25 a.m. when the truck, operated by Edward L. Dwight, 38, of 1695 Grand ave., Medford, who was uninjured, swerved to avoid a head - on collision with a car driven by Mrs. Duarte.

The Duarte car struck the truck's second set of wheels, after which the truck overturned, blocking the road, according to reports. The Allison car then collided with the overturned truck.

Valachi Confession Not Only Weapon in War Against Crime

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The confessions of racketer Joseph Valachi have aided the war on organized crime but federal law enforcement officers have more weapons than that, government sources said Monday.

The comment followed a statement issued by Justice department spokesman Edwin Guthman about reports that Valachi was found to be mentally ill before he began giving investigators the inside details of the national crime organization he called "Cosa Nostra."

Guthman said in his statement that "the important thing about Valachi is whether the information he has given the FBI about the highly disciplined criminal organization is accurate." He said investigation has shown that it is.

The Philadelphia Bulletin said Sunday in a copyrighted story that Dr. Harry R. Lipton, a consulting psychiatrist, found Valachi to be suffering from a persecution complex. Valachi was examined after he killed a fellow penitentiary prisoner who he thought was an emissary of the underworld out to kill him to keep him from talking.

In Atlanta, Lipton confirmed that he examined Valachi but declined to disclose what he found.

A source told United Press International it would not be surprising if Valachi had been found to be mentally unbalanced. He said the Justice department is not claiming Valachi is of good character and pointed out that the felon is known 'murderer, thief and trafficker in narcotics."

"You don't get information on the underworld from the PTA," the source said.

Taking Its Toll

The Washington Star said Sunday it was keeping a list of Cosa Nostra members and found that federal action against them was taking its toll. The Star's list shows federal indictments are pending against 52 identified members of Cosa Nostra and another 33 have been convicted, writer Miriam Ottenberg reported.

UPI's source emphasized that results in the move on organized crime are rooted far deeper than the Valachi information. The source said the chief value of Valachi is that he is the first syndicate member who showed a willingness to tell what he knows publicly. The value here is in convincing the public that organized crime is not just a television show but is a menace that citizens must help fight by cooperating with law enforcement oficers, he said.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said in an article in Parade Magazine that the public can cooperate by reporting information on criminal activities and by refusing to deal with criminals, even to the extent of making small, illegal bets.

Preliminary Steps Are Taken To Draft Recreation Policy

The Jackson county parks and recreation commission last night took preliminary steps toward drafting an overall county parks and recreation policy.

The commission reviewed an initial draft of a national recreation policy for counties proposed by the National Association of Counties. Each commission member will study the 18 points presented and make his recommendations in writing to the county group.

The recommendations will be consolidated and sent to the National Association of Counties. The 18 points also will be used as "stepping stones" toward a county policy.

County Parks and Recreation Director Neil Ledward said the suggested national recommendations do not adequately cover an overnight camping policy, nor how a concession should operate.

Primary Supplier

Point 6 of the suggested national policy states: "County government should be the primary supplier of day-use regional recreation facilities within the county, when such facilities are intended for use of residents from more than one community within the county."

Most western counties are operating more overnight camping sites than day use areas, he pointed out.

Some commission members pointed out that the former joint City-County Parks Director Robert L. Haworth had obtained letters from various counties on concession operations, but these had disappeared during the transition to a full-time county parks department. Ledward said he would talk to Haworth, who is now Medford parks and recreation director, about his sources of information and write them again.

Charging fees for use of county recreation areas is a matter of educating the public on the idea, the commission agreed. Some Californians coming into the area expect to be charged admission fees plus the overnight camping fee, it was noted.

Suggest Various Charges

The county parks director suggested four different charges based on the type of overnight camping area used. The highest fee would be made for a camping area in which all services are provided.

Next highest fee would be set for areas providing facilities similar to those at Howard Prairie lake now, such as flush toilets, tables and fireplaces. A lower fee would be charged in camping areas where water would be taken from a spring or well plus other basic camping facilities. Lowest fee would be charged for areas having merely pit-type restrooms, fireplaces, garbage cans, but no other facilities.

J. F. Eberhart, commission member from Ashland, said the county should consider "how much county money will be spent on facilities to improve the earning capacity of the concessionaire."

Recommend Addition

Gird Levering, commission member from Shady Cove, recommended that 50 cents be added to the overnight camping charge at Howard Prairie to pay for firewood. The August report stated $338.63 was spent on labor and operating expenses at the Howard Prairie concession. Most of this was for woodcutting, Ledward explained.

Levering said private enterprise should be encouraged to operate a group of concessions at various county recreation areas as "a package deal." Other commission members felt that private enterprise should be encouraged to operate privately owned recreation areas adjacent to public areas. This would help take the load off the public areas, it was pointed out.

Switching to tourist attractions, Mrs. Hanley Heffernan, commission member from Medford, said a policy should be set on how far the county should go in preserving historic sites for the public.

Refers to Beekman Home

Referring to the Beekman house in Jacksonville, home of an early day Oregon banker, Mrs. Heffernan said the county can "step in and save it," but it should not be expected to do it all. She said she had also been asked if the county parks commission would not take over the Britt gardens in Jacksonville, scene this summer of the Britt Music Festival.

The commission agreed that definite policy should be set on whether the county can or cannot help small communities to establish parks and recreation areas. Ledward said he had received requests for help from Rogue River, Shady Cove, Phoenix, Jacksonville and Ashland. Mrs. Heffernan suggested communities obtaining such county assistance be required to help pay for it through their town budgets.

The commission briefly discussed coming recreation areas at Agate reservoir on Dry creek and at the proposed Rogue Basin project. Operation of the Agate recreation site probably could be done on the current budget, Ledward said.

Difficulties Facing Negroes in Pursuit Of Economic Parity

By AL KUETTNER
UPI Correspondent

One of the major demands by Negroes in their climb up the civil rights ladder is better job opportunities. A report just released shows something of the difficulties ahead.

In his pursuit of economic parity with white workers, the Negro "has to run exceptionally fast in order to stand still," says the report by Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, chairman of the department of economics and business administration at Fisk university. He now is serving as visiting professor at North Carolina State college.

The report points up some facts of life that bother responsible Negro leaders as well as business and industry. Many firms, with or without pressure, have decided to lift restrictions on Negro employment and to encourage more hiring of Negroes. A big problem is where to find the Negro employees to competently fill the jobs that are available for them.

Problem Two-pronged

"Negroes face a two - pronged problem," says Henderson. Along with continued discrimination in employment, he notes "an inadequate flow of manpower to meet such limited opportunities as there are."

Henderson notes that income opportunities for Negroes still fall in the lower income fields and that vocational education programs often teach Negroes either jobs like barbering or other services for Negroes, the same menial trades or those that are becoming obsolete.

Another phase of the Henderson report shows that Negroes made their greatest income gains between 1940 and 1954 and that since then the increase has leveled off.

A big reason for the leveling off is that business and industry have gone heavily into modernization in the past eight or ten years. Firms use machinery today that wasn't even on the drawing boards in 1954. With some exceptions, Negroes who make up 10 per cent of the population have not learned these new skills.

Suggest Approaches

Negro leaders have advocated as one approach to the problem the opening of realistic industrial and vocational school training for young Negroes. They also want firms to set up their own training programs, carrying along Negro employees who can't compete for the skilled jobs until they get the training required.

On the other hand, because of the advances that have been made by Negroes, their earning power now is a formidable $22 billion per year. This is about five per cent of the personal income in the nation.

In some cities of the South with Negro populations of up to 50 per cent, the economic power of the Negro has been used strongly in the winning of desegregation demands.

Leave The South

Until a few years ago, most of the economic problems involving the Negroes were concentrated in the South. Negroes were tied to the land and most of them had strictly a servant-field hand status.

Since World War II there has been a tremendous out-migration of Negroes from the South. Since 1940, according to Henderson, 3 million Negroes have left the South. At the same time, in South and North, there has been a great transition in the central cities with Negroes moving in and white people leaving for the suburbs.

It all adds up to a competition for jobs that will be intensified in the future. The fact is that the non-skilled jobs are diminishing; the skilled ones, which take intelligence, aptitude and months or years of training, are on the increase.

Negroes, who have added seven million persons to the U. S. population in the past 20 years, have a job ahead to compete for the openings.
