Scorpion Fish Afflicted With Ugly Appearance

The scorpion fish has an affliction he can never outgrow or overcome — it's his appearance — he looks terrible. If you saw one of these fish you would not believe it. If you touched one, you would wish it had never been brought up from the bottom of the sea where it and its kin — folk wander along scaring the other fish half to death.

It is fortunate for the salt water fisherman that this repulsive and highly obnoxious character is confined to the depths and seldom brought to the surface where a horrified world can see him. No one can say for sure but chances are these fish are few in number. Perhaps this revolting character frightens even members of his own kind. It would not be too surprising to find that many boy scorpion fish are so repelled by the appearance of any girl scorpion fish that one or the other would give up and go away and hide.

There is no obvious reason why nature created such a thing in the first place, or why she dabbled around with the idea or why she overdid it by creating several varieties, some even more offbeat than the others.

Bite or Sting?
Until now, the scorpion fish have lived their mundane lives in the sea without any attention

Role of State, Local School Districts Discussed at Event

Leadership without dictation is the aim of the state board of education and there should be no conflict between the state board and local school boards since all are dedicated to the same goal, education of Oregon children," Eugene Fisher, chairman of the state board, told the regional meeting of the Oregon School Boards Association here Monday night.
Discussing the state department of education relationship with districts, Fisher who was a member of district boards long before he assumed a position on the state board, pointed out that the board is committed to the task of educating all children by the Oregon constitution. Compulsory, free education is provided in the statutes, Fisher said.
"If the job is not done at the local level, however, someone else will be called upon to do it," he added.

UNCLE SAM'S ANSWER BOOK
Do you know that since World War II the United States has extended foreign aid amounting to $91.5 billion to more than 100 countries with a total population of over 2 billion or 66 per cent of all people living today?

Do you know that since 1950 France alone has received $4.2 billion in military aid from us, more than any other country? Do you know that a record total of almost 62 per cent of all women working today are also housewives and the percentage of single women in our female labor force has dwindled to an all-time low of under 23 per cent?

Do you know that there is only one state left — Nebraska — which has neither a state individual income tax nor a general sales tax?

At least one that 90 per cent of America's households have at their TV set today, close to one billion books are now being sold each year, twice as many as were sold 15 years ago? This is a sampling of the statistics included in the 1,283 tables in the 1963 edition of "The Statistical Abstract of the United States," just released by the U.S. Department of Commerce's Bureau of Census. It's the 81th edition of Uncle Sam's Answer Book and as a source of fascinating facts about our nation and what makes us tick, it is unparalleled value.

Consider those eye-stopping figures on our foreign aid since 1945 and you'll see a key to the bitterness of this year's congressional battle over foreign aid. The rising disenchantment of the American voter stems not only from the realization that our grants and loans have not won us friends.

The rising resistance of lawmakers to the program stems not only from awareness that unless we narrow the gap between what we spend abroad and what we earn abroad, the U.S. dollar is in deepest peril. Behind both attitudes is an understandable weariness with an aid program which has reached such overwhelming totals and goes on and on and on. Behind both, too, is resentment over the fact that many countries which have become strong because of our aid are not now assuming their proper share of the free world's responsibilities. As for the disclosure that France has received more military aid from us since 1950 than any other country, we certainly have helped General de Gaulle achieve the position where he can sabotage — temporarily anyway — our greatest dreams for world unity and prosperity.

Or consider the fact that out of every 10 women who work, more than six are wives living with their husbands. The contribution of the working wife to the climb in family incomes in our country has been spectacular. The working wife, accounting for 35 to 40 per cent of the family's total income, explains why so many families are moving into the $10,000-and-up range. The working wife explains why increasing millions of American families can afford two cars, all desirable appliances, can also finance their children's higher education, annual vacations away from home, etc. The percentage of working wives in the female labor force has almost doubled since 1940.

Or consider the fact that only Nebraska now imposes neither a state individual income tax nor a general sales tax. This dramatizes the extent to which the state tax take has skyrocketed in recent years. The rate of rise in state spending and taxation far exceeds the rate of rise in federal spending and taxation. There is no reversing this trend either, for our climbing population will demand services which will keep state spending and taxing moving up. The only place to which we can look for tax relief is the federal government.

Or finally, consider the statistics on TV sets and books. We are known the world over as an affluent, materialistic nation and our TV set ownership underlines this. We are not, though, known as the avid book-reading society which the figures on our book buying underline. We are, I submit, a far more complicated group of humans than our critics think.

A closing cost-of-information note: The Abstract costs $3.75 this year, up from the $3.50 that had been maintained since 1953. You can get it from the Superintendent of Documents in Washington, D.C.
