TAX BILLS TOP ECONOMIC MEASURE SINCE WAR
The $11 billion tax reduction bill is the most important domestic economic measure to come before the U.S. Congress in 15 years, says President Kennedy — a claim which at first glance seems highly exaggerated but which, after study, turns out to have surprising validity.

Of course, in the foreign economic field, there's no disputing that Congress has passed legislation of revolutionary significance since World War II.

Already in a secure place in history are the grandiose laws Congress passed between 1948 and 1963 to spur and finance the rebuilding of war-devastated Europe (the Marshall Plan), to provide foreign aid on an unprecedented scale, to develop the economies of underdeveloped lands, to give the President great powers to slash tariffs. By these laws the United States has shaped the free world as we know it today. It has helped hold the West together, fought Russia successfully in a prolonged cold war, laid the foundations for an era of unity as well as competitiveness among freedom-loving peoples.

But in the domestic economic sphere a careful review of legislation passed by Congress since the late 1940s underlines the fact that what we have been primarily doing is extending, broadening, refining laws put on our statute books in the 1920s — a generation ago.

In retrospect, astonishingly few breakthroughs have been made on the bread-and-butter front at home and most of these breakthroughs are still on a tentative, comparatively minor scale. To be specific:

There have been major laws expanding and extending Social Security benefits far beyond what was originally dreamed — but the initial Social Security law was passed in 1935. In 1950, 1952, 1954, 1956, 1961, Congress passed laws broadening Social Security to the point where it is fundamental in the retirement plans of tens of millions of Americans. But the heart of the matter is that none of this has been "new" in the sense that this tax reduction bill is new.

There have been important laws expanding and raising the minimum wage also far beyond what was originally dreamed — but the initial Wage & Hours Act was passed in 1938. In the years since then, the minimum wage has been hiked from 25 cents an hour to 40 cents to 75 cents to $1 to $1.15 and to $1.25, and the law covers many millions of workers now. But the heart of the matter again is that none of this has been new in the sense that this tax reduction bill is new.

In the postwar period, Congress has passed housing, farm and unemployment legislation which has had a crucial impact on our economy. (You need not agree with the aim or form of the legislation to recognize its impact.) Yet, once more, the heart of the matter is that the basic agricultural, housing and unemployment legislation goes back as far as 1916 and the 1930s. Our farm price support laws have deeply affected the economy of the U.S. The efforts of Congress to stimulate public and private housing via government loans, mortgage insurance, minimum down payments, etc., have been vital in our postwar prosperity. Our unemployment insurance system has been a key anti-recession cushion. But the origins, I repeat, were long ago.

Yes, there have been some breakthroughs — laws authorizing the spending of billions on highway construction, aid to school construction, redevelopment of depressed areas, training of the jobless. And there was a large-scale tax revision law in 1954.

But there is no equal to a tax reduction bill of this magnitude specifically designed to speed and sustain the nation's growth. Not ever has a President argued so strongly for tax reduction in the face of huge and persistent budget deficits. Not ever has across-the-board tax cutting been proposed as both a prop to prosperity and a weapon against recession.

Not ever have the White House and our Central Bank been so much in agreement on the urgent need for coordination of tax reduction and money-credit policies to accelerate the domestic economy and simultaneously safeguard the dollar's value.

This tax reduction measure does stand at the top of postwar domestic economic legislation. Kennedy's claim can be documented.

Surviving Dionne Quintuplets Reveal Unhappy Home Life

NEW YORK (UPI) — The four surviving Dionne quintuplets have disclosed that their childhood was painfully unhappy and blamed their parents for failing to treat them as separate identities and expose them to ordinary experiences.

In a bitter autobiography appearing in the current issue of McCall's magazine — less than a week after the birth of the Fischer quintuplets in South Dakota — the Dionnes said their childhood was ridden with a sense of guilt inflicted by their parents. They said their parental home in Corbell, Ont., was "the saddest home we ever knew."

Annette, Marie, and Cecile are now married and have a total of nine children, and Yvonne is a nun. They are 29.

The famous sisters, who entitled their biography "We Grew Up In Trouble," said their mother was convinced she had been singled out by God for a "miracle" but feared the world would think of her and her husband as animals because of the multiple birth. Mrs. Dionne told them the first thing she said to her husband after their birth was, "They will say we are pigs."

The sisters said their parents "behaved toward each other as though they had been partners in some unspoken crime by bringing us into the world" and "drummed into us that the discord in which the family lived much of the time was our doing." "Dad" and "Mom" Dionne treated their older children as one family, the quintas as a separate category.

"We were treated as five who really amounted to one, five of a kind so close and alike that we could not possibly have separate identities or desires," they write.

"We were drenched with a sense of having sinned from the hour of our birth... we did not know any boys to be friends with... we had no training whatever for any kind of a career."

Early Years Happiest
The Dionnes said their happiest years were those early ones spent separated from their family in the nursery built for them in Corbell. The long, determined struggle of their father, Oliva Dionne, to wrest control of his daughters from Dr. A. R. Dafoe, who delivered them, and their sister Emilie's epileptic seizures darkened the later years lived with their family.

"The family considered her (Emilie's) illness a shameful thing," they said. "From what doctors say these days, it is unlikely that she could have been cured; but they say modern care can keep the seizures in check. Emilie had no such care."

Names Selected for Portland Elephant

PORTLAND (UPI) — The latest addition to the Portland zoo's elephant compound will be named soon.

Grade school children will make the final decision on three monikers submitted by the Portland Zoological Society, Mayor Terry Schrunk and the City Council and the Portland Zoo Commission.

The mayor and council suggested "Pasha" which means "king" in the Thai language. The zoological society submitted "Dino," short for dinosaur and the zoo society came up with "Tyee," a Chinook word for "big chief."

Grade schools can obtain ballots by phoning or writing the Portland Zoo Society, 4001 S.W. Canyon Rd., manager Don Spiering said.

The 153 pound male elephant, born Sunday, will be named Oct. 5.

Forrest Cooper Heads West Highway Group

DENVER (UPI) — Forrest Cooper, Oregon state highway engineer Tuesday was elected president of the Western Association of State Highway Officials at the group's 42nd annual conference.

MATTER OF KNOW-HOW
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, England, (UPI) — Frederica Martin, 21, said today that cuddling crocodiles in her circus act was just a matter of "know-how." "You have to hypnotize them first," she said.
