Career Program Attracts 50 Area High School Students

"In picking your life work you should choose a job which will send you to work smiling," Dr. Kermit Peterson, veterinarian, Oregon State university, told 50 would-be veterinarians here Saturday morning.

This was the second career program to be held in the U. S. and attracted more students, most of them from high school, than one held in Portland, Dr. Walter W. Weller, Ashland, commented.

Dr. Peterson said veterinary medicine covers a broad field. Considerable research, for instance, developed medicines used commonly by veterinarians.

Praises Veterinarians
 He praised the veterinarians of 50 years ago who had little equipment but had the intelligence to become leaders in their field. Developments of veterinary equipment is also a comparatively new field for veterinarians, Dr. Peterson said.

"Research is a good field for people who want to know why things happen," Dr. Peterson said. "Besides liking your job you must feel also it provides you good opportunity for the rest of your life."

Dr. Weller stated that North America now has 23,500 veterinarians, but 47,000 will be needed by 1980.

Dr. Monroe Holmes, state veterinarian from Portland, talked on the veterinarian's role in public health. There is no definite line of demarcation between human and veterinary medicine. An important part of this work is the study of epidemics involving human and animal health.

Training Is Required
 To qualify for this job graduate training is required so the veterinarian will know what is going on in the medical field also, Dr. Holmes said.

Dr. Fay Rankin, Salem, noted a number of girls were in the audience and said there are good opportunities for women in veterinary medicine.

A later speaker, a girl student in veterinary medicine at the University of California, agreed, but noted that obtaining admission to veterinary college is "very competitive." Fifty-two girls are accepted each year at the University of California school, she noted.

Dr. Rankin said he has a woman veterinarian for an assistant "who is very satisfactory." Her practice covers both pets and farm animals, skunks, monkeys, pet and wild birds.

Into Epidemic Area
 Dr. A. G. Beagle, Salem, Ore.

gon's federal veterinarian, said the federal veterinarians stationed in each state comprise a powerful striking force which can be ordered rapidly into an epidemic area. For those who like to travel and want to take advantage of the government-financed continuing education programs, federal service is good, he said.

Dr. Beagle said he was in private practice for 16 years and 28 years in federal service. Fringe benefits include regular hours, annual leave, sick leave, health and accident insurance, of which the government pays half.

Dr. Douglas G. Delrick, Kingsley Air Force base veterinarian, Klamath Falls, said the only veterinarians in the armed forces are in the Army and Air Force. Air Force veterinary practice covers technical veterinary work such as aero-space medicine and the general veterinary field.

Most of the general field covers public health protection. Pay starts at $500 a month for a first lieutenant and includes $100 special profession pay. Although the pay is comparatively low compared to private practice, there are many fringe benefits, he grinned.

Veterinary Schools
 Only three western states have veterinary schools: California, Colorado and Washington, Dr. Weller explained. Tuition for Colorado state residents is $1,500. Out of state students pay $7,000 tuition. This plus the $15,000 veterinary students spend on their education means a lot of money, more than many out of state students can afford.

Dr. Robert Wilcox, Medford veterinarian, explained the WICHE (Western Institute for Higher Education) program which helped finance his education. Through this program students from the western states are interchanged among states which have some advance schools such as medical and dental but not others such as colleges of veterinary medicine and out of state tuition reduced.

13 Are Allowed
 Oregon is allowed only 13 applicants annually under the WICHE program for veterinary medicine. Students must apply for acceptance first to the college of their choice, then for aid under the program, Dr. Wilcox explained.

Recommended high school subjects to qualify for two years of pre-veterinary medicine study in college include trigonometry, half unit and one unit each of biology, chemistry and physics. The pre-veterinary curriculum includes 16 units of chemistry; six of English and speech; six units of physics; 12 units of social science, three units of animal husbandry, eight units of zoology, plus nine units of approved electives, Dr. Weller explained. Most of the speakers stressed that high school students should get the best grades possible.
