LYNN SIMMS (UPI) Some Contestants Objected

Negro Student Removed as UC Contestant Escort

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — University of California officials planned today to look into charges that a Negro student was replaced at the last minute as an escort for national football game festivities because of his race.

The Negro student, Lynn Sims, 20, was one of nine members of the Californians, a university honor society, selected to escort the queen contestants onto the field at Berkeley Memorial Stadium Saturday during halftime ceremonies at the California-Iowa State game.

Asked to Step Aside — But a spokesman for the Californians said officials of the Berkeley Junior Chamber of Commerce, which sponsors the annual national football game contest, asked Sims to step aside for a white student two hours before the event.

The honor society spokesman said some queen contestants from southern universities had objected to Sims' participation. A white member of the society substituted for Sims.

James Faulkner, president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, admitted some contestants had requested that Sims be replaced. "As their hosts we were obliged to obey their wishes on the matter," Faulkner said.

Arleigh Williams, dean of men at the university, said he would investigate the incident. "If the charges are true," Williams said, "and unless an understanding can be reached, the university will not participate in further Jaycee festivities of any sort."

More than 250 persons attended the event. The money will be used to renovate worn out equipment at the YMCA, officials noted.

Dick Hawkins, auction chairman, presented awards to both Bill Bray and O. J. Brenner for their auctioneering during the afternoon and past help with the program.

Goldwater Would Use Troops To Enforce School Decisions

WASHINGTON (CQ) — Sen. Barry Goldwater (R - Ariz.) would use the full force of federal authority — including federal troops, under certain conditions — to enforce court decisions on school integration.

Goldwater took this stand, in sharp contrast to his past assertion that the 1954 Supreme Court integration decision was not "the law of the land," in an interview with Congressional Quarterly Service.

The Arizona Senator, now a front-running contender for his party's 1964 Presidential nomination, stressed practical, pragmatic answers to problems, rather than the ideological and often dogmatic stands for which he is known, in the CQ interview. For example, he:

—Opposed as impractical the three Constitutional amendments currently being pressed in conservative quarters. (The amendments would establish a 50-member "court of the Union" above the Supreme Court, keep the federal courts out of state legislative apportionment matters and make it easier for the states to amend the Constitution without the consent of Congress.)

—Endorsed the 1962 Supreme Court decision in the Tennessee apportionment case, Baker v. Carr, which has caused federal court challenges to state legislative apportionments in most of the states. "I think that is a function of the courts," Goldwater said. "They probably waited too long."

—Said he no longer favors, as he previously did, application of antitrust laws to unions. "I don't think it will work, frankly," he said.

—Opposed a national civil defense shelter program, a pet project of his chief competitor for the nomination, New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R). "The public couldn't care less about this subject," he said. "If the neutron bomb is developed it will make obsolete every shelter we have."

—Said he did not favor abolishing the income tax — unless the annual Government budget (now about $100 billion) should go down to less than $50 billion. "These people that advocate the repeal of the income tax have yet to come up with any sound argument as to what they would replace it with," Goldwater said. A national sales tax, he said, "would be a rat race."

Confirmed his opposition to the progressive features of the U. S. income tax, which he says stifles incentive, but said: "I wouldn't reduce the progressive features and nothing else, because this wouldn't work."

Said he opposed federal fair trade legislation. "A fair traded item becomes an unprofitable item" and fair trade rules can easily be avoided, he said. "As a practical thing, it just doesn't work."

Endorsed revision of the McCarran - Walter Immigration Act. "I think we ought to revise the quotas," Goldwater said. "I think they are way out of line. We are not allowing enough Chinese in this country, in my opinion, or enough Koreans. We have concentrated too heavily on countries that already have overwhelming numbers of people in this country," Goldwater opposed, however, any over-all increase in immigration, pointing to the current increase in the existing U.S. population.

Had no objection to fluoridation of water supplies to reduce tooth decay (a favorite target of right wing groups). "If the doctors say it's all right, I'll have to take their word for it," Goldwater said.

In his 1960 book, "Conscience of a Conservative," Goldwater had declared that the Constitution gives the Federal Government no power over education and that "the Constitution is what its authors intended it to be and said it was — not what the Supreme Court says it is." Goldwater had said he supported "all efforts by the states, excluding violence of course, to preserve their rightful powers over education."

In the CQ interview, however, when asked how a state might properly resist federal court school integration orders, he said:

"The idea is not to resist it. There is nothing in our Constitution that says a person can violate the law. Neither is there anything that says a state can violate the law. If the states feel that states' rights have been tampered with, you have the amendment process or the elective process."

Asked if he, as President, would use federal authority to enforce federal court decisions on school integration, Goldwater said:

"I would first try moral persuasion. I would visit the state where it is practiced and try to point out to them the moral wrongness of it. And failing in that, I think that the Attorney General should have the power to use a very tightly drawn law aimed like a rifle at the precise problem in a school district. . . . Yes, I would use it."

Asked if he would use federal troops or marshals to secure compliance where the Attorney General's efforts fail, Goldwater said:

"There are times when the President can use troops. There are times when he can't. I think the troops were wrong in Little Rock, but probably there was some justification for their use in Mississippi in preserving law and order and protection of life and property."

Proposal Beaten By Roll Call Vote On Senate Floor

Treaty Certain Of Ratification

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, who has vowed to oppose the nuclear test ban treaty even if it means "political suicide," today was overwhelmingly defeated in a bid to make the pact contingent on a Soviet withdrawal from Cuba.

The Arizona Republican's proposal was voted down by a roll call vote of 75-17 after top leaders of both parties strongly opposed it. Goldwater had argued it was necessary to test Russia's good faith in seeking to ease cold war tensions.

Certain of Ratification

The treaty already was certain of ratification when it is brought to a final vote Tuesday. But the Goldwater restriction was the most serious obstacle and its rejection apparently signaled defeat of a series of other proposed reservations.

Unlike the treaty, which requires a two-thirds majority for approval, the Goldwater proposal needed only a bare majority of those present and voting. It came nowhere near that mark.

Voting for the Goldwater proposal were 10 Republicans and 7 Democrats. Opposed were 21 Republicans and 54 Democrats.

Possible Clue

The roll call gave a possible clue as to how three uncommitted senators will vote on the treaty. Sens. John McClellan (D-Ark.) and Margaret Chase Smith (R-Maine), two of the doubtful voters against the amendment, Sen. Edwin L. Mcchem (R-N.M.), the third, voted for it.

Goldwater's proposal was challenged at once by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), who told the Senate its adoption would "have a very grave effect, driving Khrushchev back into Mao Tse-tung's arms. . . ."

Others Dropped

Goldwater, the leading GOP presidential contender in public opinion polls, called up his reservation to the treaty as Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D - Conn.) dropped four other proposed restrictions to the pact.

Goldwater's reservation would postpone the effectiveness of the nuclear pact until Russia had removed its entire military base from Cuba under UN inspection.

The Arizona senator made it clear that he will "vote against the treaty with or without this reservation." But he made a strong plea to senators who plan to back the treaty, which bars all but underground nuclear tests.

Duncan Questions Coast Guard Plans

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Robert B. Duncan (D-Ore.) has asked the Coast Guard why it plans to remove its lifeboat station at Port Orford, Ore., when the Army expects to spend $702,000 building a breaker extension there.

Duncan, in a letter to the Coast Guard, said: "It seems a paradox to me that the Army engineers have decided the Port Orford Harbor worthy of a $702,000 improvement which will naturally increase shipping at the same time the Coast Guard plans to eliminate its manned lifeboat service."

The congressman said "I have recently made a very strong representation of this view in a letter to the Coast Guard commandant along with Sens. Wayne Morse and Maura Neuberger."

"We pointed out that the harbor improvement is certainly consistent with the needs of water commerce at the mouth of the Coquille river. We can expect more, not less demand for Coast Guard service at Port Orford," he said.

Wrecking Yard Not in Violation, Official Reports

A wrecking yard in the South Talent interim zoned area is not in violation of state law, M. L. Page, Salem, manager of the registration division, department of motor vehicles, has written the county court.

Page said he recently accompanied Jack Spencer, field investigator, on an inspection of the wrecking yard in question. They learned the owner's son holds a dealer's license for the yard. Vehicles outside the fence are all under the dealer's license and are operable. Although outside the fence they were not visible from the highway, Page wrote.

The yard operator told the two officials he would move these vehicles behind the fence when he can hire somebody to make room for them in the enclosure, according to the letter read this morning by County Judge Earl M. Miller. Any debris which had been reported outside the fence has been cleaned up, the two men noted. Plan to Recheck Yard
