Legislature Reflects People, Speaker Says

"In the souls of its citizens is to be found the likeness of the state."

Using this quotation, John Dellenback, Medford lawyer and member of the Oregon House of Representatives, told Medford Zonta club members Thursday night that "The legislature is what the people want—it is as good or bad as you want it to be. Be concerned with your government, play your full role as a citizen. Make your state government your problem."

The speaker touched only indirectly on the controversial tax measure which has been referred to the voters and said that he is concerned about "the risk we run when we continue to tax more and more heavily to provide more and more services for the people."

Mr. Dellenback believes that extreme taxation can reach the point where it destroys the incentive of business and industry and the citizens to work and produce. He declared that it is extremely important that the people do nothing to destroy or change the basic economic system of this nation.

Reluctant Backer

The legislator added that he was a "reluctant backer" of some of measures passed in the last session. He warned that the sale tax is not a panacea and that it might not solve the state's tax problems. He said the state might be disappointed in the sum which a sales tax would collect from tourists and reminded his listeners that such a tax would not bring in further revenue from gasoline, food or lodging.

Mr. Dellenback reviewed the processes of the legislature briefly, said there had been "more politics" in the 1963 session than in the previous one, said there was "a clear party line showing on taxation issues."

At one point in his talk Mr. Dellenback declared that "a large part of the protection of our system of government lays with the news media."

He urged the women to inform themselves about the course of measures in the legislature and to write their representatives but said "your letters must show some knowledge of the legislation to be effective." Don't just be for or against something, but state clearly your reasons for your stand.

Mr. Dellenback spoke during a dinner meeting of the service club held at the Town House. Mrs. Florence Bolton presided and Mrs. Elsie Butler introduced the speaker.
