Violinists Vanishing Race Is Melancholy Prediction

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER United Press International NEW YORK (UPI)—Jascha Heifetz once said that violin playing is a great but perishable art. At least one man is willing to agree that Heifetz knew what he was talking about. "Violinists are a vanishing race," Vito Pisis, who is almost as intimately associated with the violin as Heifetz, said in an interview.

Pisis's melancholy utterance reflects his concern for businessmen who are partly dependent on violins for their bread and butter.

Pisis is the proprietor of a number of romantic-type night spots which employ first-rate violinists to stroll among the patrons and play worry-banishing music.

He has enough musicians on hand at his home base, Chez Vito in New York, and his other clubs to take care of his needs for the present.

But he is worried about the future. So he made a survey of professional music schools, a canvass that confirmed his suspicions and deepened his gloom. Juillard School of Music reported fewer students now are studying the violin because the instrument takes many years to master. Distractions at home, such as television, make practice there difficult. The New York School of Music said the violin was more popular 40 years ago, before radio became a commercial enterprise, than it is today. This school said comparatively only 10 per cent of the students now are bowing the strings.

No Quick Results "Children today like things to come easy and get quick results," a New York School of Music spokesman said.

At the American Conservatory of Music, a spokesman said only two of his school's 50 students are studying the violin.

Youngsters in today's space age seem to prefer instruments that are easy to learn, the survey disclosed, indicating why the accordion and guitar are more popular than ever.

"I have employed hundreds of violinists both here and abroad," Pisis said. "I regard this as a situation full of alarm for those of us who enjoy violin music."

"There should be an organized campaign to win children back to the violins or should we admit that anything difficult, no matter how much the eventual enjoyment, is beyond our capacity? Maybe Pisis's fears are groundless.

In a pinch, he can always get Jack Benny.

Fall Garden Tour Plan Of Club

A fall garden tour will be conducted by Medford Garden club members Thursday, October 3. They are to leave at 9 a.m. from the Jackson county courthouse, Eighth street side.

Gardens to be visited are those of Mrs. Leland Knox, Magnolia lane; the Claire Hanley arboretum, Hanley road; Westwinds nursery, Scenic avenue, Central Point, and Mrs. C. E. Green, also on Scenic avenue.

A regular meeting of the club is set for 1:30 p.m. in the courthouse auditorium. Mrs. Mary O. Weber will speak on blackbirds, the bird of the month.

The horticulture lesson will be a panel discussion of horticulture problems conducted by Mrs. Ray Cyr, Mrs. Charles R. Greene, Mrs. J. W. Ostrander and Mrs. Charles C. Stearns. They will answer and discuss questions and problems of members.

Mrs. William H. Naylor will present a program about house plants.

An executive board meeting will be held Monday, September 30 at 1:30 p.m., in the home of Mrs. Clifton Green, 1786 Brookhurst street.

Hetty Green Book Reviewed

ASHLAND—The strange life of Hetty Green, as told by A. H. Lewis in "The Day They Shook the Plum Tree," was chosen by Mrs. Frances Worth for her book review at the Monday afternoon meeting of Fortnightly Study club. Members met at the home of Mrs. Ruth King, 108 South Pioneer street.

The book's title refers to the day in 1952 that the Chase National Bank of New York sent out 119 letters containing more than $100 million to disburse the estate of Mrs. Green, once rated the richest woman in the world. The fortune, begun in 1624 in Massachusetts, came to Mrs. Green in the last century. Through ruthlessness, connivance and financial acumen she became a powerful figure, hated alike by the public and her own two children, whom she had kept in penury.

The short subject, "Folklore of American Weather" by Eric Sloan, was presented by Miss Cora Mason. In it the author points out many of the common superstitions about weather, while at the same time he cites "the fundamental knowledge of our forefathers which is basic today." The material of the weather observer's long and careful study is compiled in dictionary form for easy reference.

LINCOLN BURGERS Here's an easy way to ring the culinary bell at a teen-agers' party: Cut ripe olives into wedges; combine with ground beef, catsup, salt, pepper, instant minced onion and a bit of marjoram. Shape into 6 x 1-inch "logs." Broil or pan-fry turning once, to desired doneness. Serve on long hot buttered buns.

MANOR-ISMS

By ETHELYN EVANS

The life-long careers of our members are of an infinite variety; among them I find a number of missionaries. Dr. and Mrs. George Hagman tell of thrilling experiences while working in China for many years as medical missionaries. Dr. Hagman was head surgeon and director — and Mrs. Hagman, a nurse, was one of his assistants — at a hospital east of Shanghai, which was first to be bombed by the Japanese in the Sino-Japanese War. It was a devastating surprise, as no one at that time could imagine an attack on such institutions.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Hagman happened to be at a mountain camp. The doctor immediately returned to his post at the Mission, encountering great difficulties in traveling, as the Japanese were pushing up the river and blocking escape routes.

With his native staff, using what was left of the hospital plant and the scant supplies remaining, he worked around-the-clock treating battle wounded and fleeing refugees. In the meantime, Mrs. Hagman was doing as much of the same work as possible in the mountain camp, which was filled with sick and homeless Chinese.

Under the constant work and strain, Dr. Hagman's health broke. Finally, after long negotiation, he was evacuated to the States for treatment in a Colorado tuberculosis sanatorium; but it was two years before his wife could join him. All of that time she continued to work at the camp.

During their years in China, the Hagmans cared for and reared two Chinese foster daughters. One of these girls is now attending college at Oregon State university, Corvallis, the other lives in Peking, China, and is the wife of the private secretary to Premier Chou en-Lai. Both daughters continue to correspond with their foster parents regularly.

Eventually Dr. Hagman's health did improve, but not sufficiently for him to return to his work in China. He was, however, able to work as school physician for Cranbrook Boys school, a preparatory school in Michigan, for a number of years before retiring.

They just happened to notice a "one-time" ad for Rogue Manor in an Episcopal church paper. They wrote for information, then mailed in an application and later on came to Medford to investigate. Both are glad to be permanently anchored in the Manor.
