

THE WEEK IN CALIFORNIA

Pennant Winners Make News; Heat Wave Extends Over State

Only a few mild cheers emitted from Dodger stadium in Los Angeles when the Dodgers won their second National League pennant since they moved from Brooklyn in 1958.

But the seat stadium was the 56,000 seat stadium was the exception for offices on the club level where only secretaries and other employees were on hand to celebrate.

The news that the Dodgers were the new champions and would meet the New York Yankees in the World Series was received by most LA players by radio and television from Chicago, where the Cubs extinguished hard-pressed St. Louis 6-3 and handed the flag to the Dodgers.

In a somewhat anti-climatic meeting a few hours later—in Dodger stadium—the new National League champions celebrated by hugging the 100 New York Mets 4-1. The Dodgers had been in first place since a game July 2 in which St. Louis also figured.

Elsewhere, there were these developments: Heat wave: A heat wave descended on the Los Angeles area and spread into northern California.

Heat wave: A heat wave descended on the Los Angeles area and spread into northern California. Temperature records were broken up and down the state. Some schools in the outlying areas of Los Angeles, where smog added to the misery of millions, allowed students to stay home because of the heat.

State Fair: The California Bar association convention went on record as unanimously opposed to ultra-conservative proposals that would give states power to override the Federal government.

demonstration at Hollywood high school that began when 400 students began chanting, "It's too hot!"

Obscenity: Author Eugene Burdick told an Assembly committee the state should do away with its laws against pornography and obscenity. In writings works Burdick, author of "The Ugly American," and "Fall Safe," said wording in the law could oppose a vigorous, expanding language and might freeze literature where it is.

Civil rights: A National Civil Rights leader said in San Francisco the Kennedy administration had done more than any other for minority groups—but accused it of being timid.

In Los Angeles, an 11-day hunger strike protesting alleged de facto segregation in city schools ended on the advice of doctors. Three civil rights demonstrators had gone home earlier, ill and weak, but Jay Frank, 19, Martin Goldsmith, 49, and Stanley Kohls, 21, demonstrated 253 hours without food before they halted their vigil at the board of education building.

Supervision and facilities are provided by the Medford school district and no school tax money is applied to the evening program. Students provide their own textbooks and supplies.

Persons, wishing additional information regarding the classes, are advised to call the adult education office at the Medford High School, 773-7220.

The iron workers said their workers had been given their jobs.

Population: The city of Los Angeles grew by another 150,000 persons between 1960 and September of this year, bringing the city's total population to a record 2,634,000 persons.

The city planning director's office said the greatest growth in the city, the nation's third largest, had come in the San Fernando valley which added 101,330 persons during the period.
