Educator Speaks About 'New Look'

"The New Look of Education" was the topic chosen by Dr. Elliott D. Becken, who was guest speaker for Women of Unity last Friday at the Unity church, Holly and Haven streets. Dr. Becken is assistant superintendent of Medford public schools. He began his talk by saying "Research, which is the application of new knowledge to industrial processes and automation, is remaking the economy of this country. The scope and rapidity of this process is bringing about what has been called the second industrial revolution." The impacts of this revolution are profound for education, and we must be ready for them," he added.

He cited World War II as penalties of educational inequality. Almost two million men of 18 million screened, were total or borderline illiterates. Teachers and advisors work very hard with students to prevent dropouts from high school, he added. Oregon, in 1962 experienced 22 per cent drop outs. Wisconsin was the lowest with only 7.7 per cent, while Georgia was high with 48.2 per cent. School dropouts are the last employed of the first laid off, Dr. Becken stressed.

Education is investment and means of increased national productivity and larger personal incomes," he declared. He added that to maintain our standards of living in this country, we must not have a segment of the population of labor force who are unable to do the job. The only way to do this is through the personal responsibility that one must acquire: the training and professional preparation through job training opportunities.

Figures Quoted
He spoke of the occupational trends, which have a growing demand for workers with increased general education and technical skills. In the past 50 years, unskilled woman labor has dropped from 12.5 per cent to less than 6 per cent in 1960, and will be less than 5 per cent by 1970, the speaker said. In 1960, professional and technical workers made up 8 per cent of employed population; by 1970, over 12.5 per cent will be skilled workers. By 1970, women workers will number 30 million, or one-third of the labor force, and at least two of every five women, between the ages of 20 and 65 will be gainfully employed, Dr. Becken declared.

"Education is an investment and means of increased national productivity and larger personal incomes," he declared. He added that to maintain our standards of living in this country, we must not have a segment of the population of labor force who are unable to do the job. The only way to do this is through the personal responsibility that one must acquire: the training and professional preparation through job training opportunities.

Dr. Becken was presented with a gift from the Women of Unity.

Miss Jean Allen, accompanied by Miss Jamie Henderson, sang two numbers.

Mrs. Clay M. Lee, program chairman, spoke on the important days in September, and reminded the members to study the tax issue carefully and vote October 15.
