The Gal in the Galley

Oh, some people hurry toward Indian curry,
And others are nuts for spaghetti.
A few place their benison squarely
on venison,
Pheasant or squab or Brown Betty.
Some fly up from Austin for beans
in Boston,
And some go to France for the truffles.
There's even a glutton for old English mutton
Bedizened with paper-lace ruffles.
And many sing praise for exotic soufflés,
Or swear that tamales are drooly.
But home by the range, such foibles seem strange
To this old gourmet, yours truly.
For I'd deem it a thrill to be eating my fill
Wherever I might get taken
For an innertube stew or a fricasseed shoe
That was somebody else's cookin!

The neighborhood children had been invited to the youngster's birthday party, and each brought a present. One kid offered a toy six-shooter, another a realistic army bazooka, a third a rubber Bowie knife, and still another a space-age rocket gun.

The guest of honor was disconsolate. "I don't know how to play with guns and knives," he said sadly. "You see, we don't have a television set." —James Shurluck

The young couple had completely remodeled their old home. There were many improvements, but the one the wife was proudest of was her brightly polished hardwood floors.

"When we bought the place," she explained, "the floors were in terrible shape. But since I've worked on them, three people have fallen down!"

That something "borrowed" at most weddings is what it cost the bride's father to finance the shindig.
