Democracy Is Doing, Not Talking, Speaker Tells Business Women

"Democracy is something you do — not something you talk about" quoted Mrs. Justin Smith, faculty member at Medford High school who talked for a dinner meeting Thursday night of Medford Business and Professional Women's club at North's.

The dinner was the closing event of the Medford club's observance of National Business Women's week, and honored Miss Gladys Durrand, 1963 Best of the Week.

In her talk themed to the slogan of the national week, "Responsibility of Full Partnership," Mrs. Smith introduced two little used words "historicism" and "relevancy" to her listeners. The teacher quoted from Karl Popper's book "The Open Society and Its Enemies" in which he refuted the idea of historicism, the belief that history is controlled by specific historical or evolutionary laws whose discovery enables the prophecy of the destiny of man. Put in a simpler form it is "whatever will be — will be."

Mrs. Smith thinks, with Dr. Popper, that this belief is merely an excuse to evade responsibility as a person and citizen, and as such is dangerous to a democracy.

Introduces Words
Introducing the word "relevancy" Mrs. Smith said that the person who fails to take unto himself the responsibility for the acts of his government, his city or community, is failing to become relevant to his situation.

She also quoted from Edmund Cahn who wrote "The new predicament of democratic man is his moral involvement in the misdeeds of government. Representative government has made us not only participants, but accomplices, if you will, in the deeds that are done in our name and by our authority."

Mrs. Smith added that many citizens have a fuzzy idea about the nature of the democratic state created in this nation, and that we say "government derives its just power from the consent of the governed" but that few really believe this.

Mrs. Smith explored the idea of anthropomorphism, which is giving human characteristics to things not human. She noted as examples John Bull, Ivan, and Uncle Sam and pointed out that some citizens of these governments tend to think that they themselves are in no way responsible for the acts of "John Bull" or "Uncle Sam." She said that down this road of thinking lies dictators and tyrants and that persons with this idea do not fulfill their share of responsibility in a democratic society. She added "They do not become relevant," and said "When we get it into our heads that the sovereign state of the United States means us, 'we, the people', we are well on our way toward democratic citizenship."

Many Guests
Mrs. Viera Remond, club president, welcomed members and guests and Mrs. Catherine Caldwell introduced guests, who represented several women's groups and the speaker.

Miss Durrand lighted a friendship candle to mark the intergroup event, and thanked her fellow club members for the honor of being Best of the Week. She said "you have given me a glorious week which I will never forget."

Guests included a delegation from Ashland BPWC headed by the president, Mrs. Virginia Westerfield, and Mrs. Alice Arnold, the Ashland club's honored member for the week.

Mrs. Harriet Watson read an inspiration message in lieu of grace.

Miss Lucile Lenox was general chairman of the week long observance.
